THE AUTHOR.

PREFACE.

IMPERIAL INDIA of the present day is a vast country and a varied field. It is a matter for surprise how little is known of its Geography as a whole. To convey a comprehensive knowledge of the Geography and present Extent and Resources of this great Empire, as well as of the Native States embraced therein, in a brief and convenient form, made as complete as a judicious utilization of available and authentic materials of the most recent date could render it, has long been the desire of the compiler. The difficulty of bringing so wide a subject within convenient limits, so as to reduce the labour of reference to a minimum, has been very great; how far success has been attained in the attempt now made, the public will decide. A work like this,—the first of its kind relating to Modern Indian Geography,—has involved considerable labor and thought, and no pains have been spared to make its form attractive as to arrangement, and its contents correct as to detail. As a handy work of reference for the literary and official world of India, as well as of Europe, and for those whose work or tastes may lead them to enquire about matters connected with England's Indian Empire of the present time, it is hoped that this Index will prove of some practical value.

The authorities consulted will be found at the end of the text.

Simla Hill States, or the Cis Sutlej Highlands. See statement below for position of the several groups.

Commissioner, Umballa Division.

Remarks.—The relations of Kashmir and Bahawalpur with the British Government are regulated by treaties, those of Patiala, Jind and Nabha by Sanads or rescripts of the Governor General. Kashmir pays an annual tribute of shawls and shawl-goats; Patiala, Jind and Nabha furnish a quota of horsemen for general duty in British territory. These chiefs, differ from the remaining feudatories in the fact that they have been granted full powers of life and death over their subjects. The total tribute paid by the above Feudatory States, amounts to about £28,000 per annum.

The above Principalities are arranged in the following Geographical Groups, as a key to their position:—

BRIEF GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

Area, Position, Boundaries, &c.

The territories under the Government of the Punjab include all the country from the river Jumna on the east, to the Suleman mountains on the west, and from Kashmir and the Swat country on the North, to Rajputana and Sind on the South. This extensive Province, one of the most important in India, is situated between 27° 30′ and 35° 0′ North Latitude, and 69° 0′ to 79° 0′ East Longitude, the extreme length being about 800 miles and extreme width about 650 miles. The area of the British possessions within these limits is 104,973 square miles, that of the native dependencies about 101,534 square miles, the total area being about 206,507 square miles, of which less than one-third are cultivated, one-fourth culturable and the remainder unculturable waste. The Punjab west of the river Bias was annexed in March 1849, on the close of the second Sikh war. The Jullundur Doab and the hill district of Kangra, were ceded in March 1846 after the first Sikh war. The country east of the river Sutlej, formerly designated the Cis Sutlej States, and including the territory on the left bank of the Sutlej, was annexed in December 1845, the lapsed estates being brought under British administration in January 1847, and the hill district of Simla being acquired after the Gurkha war of 1814-16. The Delhi territory, west of the river Jumna was transferred from the North-Western Provinces in February 1858.

Topography, &c.

Punjab Proper is so called from two Persian words signifying 'five waters' in reference to the five great rivers which flow through it. With respect to the propriety of the designation, it is however to be observed, that there are in fact six rivers, the Indus, the Jhelum, the Chenab, the Ravi, the Bias and the Sutlej, but as the Bias has a much shorter course than the others, it seems to have been disregarded when the name of the country was bestowed. In this description the whole country lying within the Lieutenant-Governor's jurisdiction, is designated as "The Punjab Province."

The northern and southern parts of the Punjab Province differ very greatly in physical features. On the north-east runs the western portion of the great northern mountain barrier of our Indian empire known as the Himalayas or Himaleh, consisting not of one but of a vast series of ranges and valleys separating the upper basins of the large rivers, from the Jumna on the east to the Indus on the west, and skirted on the southern side by the lower or subordinate ranges known as the Sewaliks and Salt Range. The North-West portion is also very mountainous, the hills beyond the Indus forming a series almost like a continuation of the Himalayas, and connecting with the Suleman range which forms the western boundary of the province for some 300 or 400 miles. The Salt Range runs east and west between the Jhelum and the Indus. The southern face of this range is for the most part abrupt and precipitous, and the highest point on it is Sakesar 4,994 feet. On the west of the river Indus the range is continued until it meets the Suleman Range, and the name then changes to that of the Kalabagh hills.

The plains of the country may be described as vast expanses of alluvial clay and loam intersected by the great rivers of the province of which the Indus is the chief, (see also Bombay Presidency). The great rivers from which the Punjab Proper takes its name, form natural divisions of a large portion of the country, known here as the Doabs. These divisions stretch south-west between the rivers with a regularity unbroken by any eminence of importance, and decline imperceptibly from about 1,600 feet above sea level to about 200 feet at the junction of the united streams with the Indus. The long and narrow strip between the Suleman range and the Indus is known as the Derajat (Upper and Lower); the country lying between the Indus and the Jhelum, is the Sind Sagar Doab; that between the Jhelum and the Chenab, the Jach or Chaj Doab; that between the Chenab and the Ravi, the Rechna Doab; that between the Ravi and the Bias, the Bari Doab; and that between the Bias and the Sutlej, the Jullundur Doab. Of these Doabs the Sind Sagar is the most extensive, while that of the Bari is by far the most populous as well as the most important, containing as it does the three great cities of Lahore, Amritsar and Moolt'an. These Doabs have some features in common; in the submontane portions vegetation is most luxuriant; in the vicinity of the rivers the tracts are enriched by their alluvial soil and fertilised by inundation, while as the higher central parts are approached, uncultivated land, covered with low brush-wood and reed grass, is met with, affording boundless grazing grounds for camels, cattle, sheep and goats. Towards the lower extremities of the large rivers, as they approach each other, the country becomes nearly level, in which, owing to the extremely scanty rainfall, cultivation is maintained by means of numerous small canals or irrigation channels, which intersect the country in every direction.

In consequence of the nearly unbroken flatness of the surface, the great rivers frequently change their courses in an extraordinary degree. The Sutlej which formerly ran close to the town of Ludhiana, is now several miles to the northward; the Ravi which once washed the walls of the city of Lahore, runs in a channel three or four miles off to the northward; the Chenab which ten or twelve years ago ran close to the town of Ramnagar, is now four or five miles distant, and the same applies to the Jhelum. So the Ghara at no great distance of time held for above 200 miles a course considerably westward of the present and parallel to it.

The Sutlej, the most eastern of the large rivers above named, rising in Thibet, unites with the Bias at Hariki, a few miles from the village of Sobraon, the scene of our great battle with the Sikhs, the united stream for about 300 miles to the confluence with the Chenab, is then called the Ghara. The Chenab meets the Jhelum near Jhang, and the Ravi near Sirai Sidhu; this stream then loses the name of Chenab and takes the name of Trimab, or 'three waters' for a further distance of 110 miles to the junction with the Ghara at Madwala; from this point to the confluence with the Indus near Mithankot, a further distance of about 60 miles, the single stream of these united waters bears the name of Punjnad, or 'five streams.' These noble streams, besides affording means of inland navigation scarcely equalled, are of inestimable value for the purposes of irrigation.

Amongst the minor rivers of the province, are the Cabul and Swat rivers in the Peshawar valley, the Kuram and Luni in Upper Derajat, the Sohan near Rawalpindi and the Markanda and Ghagar in the Umballa District, the two last-named losing themselves in the Bickaneer desert.

The country lying between the Sutlej and the Jumna is not properly part of the Punjab Proper. It includes in the upper part, the Cis Sutlej states, and in the lower, the Delhi territory. The hills in this latter portion of the province appear to be spurs or offshoots of the end of the Aravalli range, the principal being the hills in the Delhi and Gurgaon districts.

The means of communication in the Punjab include rivers and canals, ordinary roads and railroads. The water communication is about 2,500 miles; the length of made roads about 25,000 miles, and the length of Railway lines open for traffic at the present time is about 1,080 miles. Of the Railway lines there are four within the limits of the province, viz: the Sind, Punjab and Delhi Railway, open for traffic; the Punjab Northern State Railway open up to Jhelum, the extension to Rawalpindi being under construction and which will be very shortly opened for traffic; the Indus Valley State Railway from Mooltan viâ Bahawalpur to Rohri, open for traffic; and a small section of the Rajputana State Railway from Delhi to Rewari, with a branch to Faraknagar, also open for traffic. Branch feeders to these lines, viz., from Ludhiana to Ferozepore, from Amritsar to Shahpur, from Jullundur to Hoshiarpur, from Umballa to Kalka, from Raiwind to Kasur, from Wazirabad to Jummoo viâ Sialkot, and from Wazirabad to the Salt Range, are in contemplation. Among the principal of the various canals which run through the province are, the Bari Doab Canal, the Western Jumna Canal, the Sirhind Canal, the upper and lower Sutlej Canals, and the Delhi and Gurgaon irrigation works. Of these the Bari Doab Canal is the most important; leaving the Ravi at Madhopur where the river debouches from the lowest of the Himalayan ranges, the main line 247 miles in length, after throwing off branches to Lahore, Kasur and Sobraon, passes through Amritsar, and crossing the Sind Punjab and Delhi Railway at Changamunga station, again empties itself into the Ravi. In addition to the main line, 247 miles, the Kasur branch, 84 miles, the Sobraon branch 61 miles, and the Lahore branch 74 miles, make up an aggregate length of 466 miles. The main line of the Sirhind canal leaves the Sutlej at Rupar.

Climate and Sanataria.

The climate of the Punjab is characterized by much drought, and as compared with that of the rest of Northern India is more given to extremes, the heat being intense in the summer months owing to the general scantiness of the rain-fall, (except in the sub-Himalayan districts), and the cold great during the cold season which lasts longer than that of countries farther south. The hot season begins about the middle of April, and the heat is almost intolerable from that time till August, being greater than elsewhere in India. Frequent dust-storms then occur, and on calm days spiral columns of dust arise and travel onward, whirling round continually for one or two miles before subsiding. In September the heat moderates, October is temperate and agreeable, and from November to April it is cold, and frosts occur at night. The rain-fall throughout the province chiefly occurs in July and August, but a considerable amount of rain falls in the winter and early spring months, especially in the northern and western districts. At the hill stations the rain-fall is considerably heavier than in the plains. The following are the Sanataria of the Punjab province, they are 15 in number, viz:—Murree in district Rawalpindi, height 7,518 feet; Cherat in district Peshawar, height 4,497 feet; Sakesar in district Jhelum, height 4,994 feet; Dalhousie, height 6,740 feet, and Bakloh, height 4,584 feet, in district Gurdaspur; Bhagsu, height 4,058 feet, and Dharmsala, height 6,111 feet, in district Kangra; Simla, height 7,084 feet, Kasauli, height 6,173 feet, Dagshai, height 6,100 feet, Subathu, height 4,253 feet, Jutogh, height 6,370 feet, Solon, height 5,165 feet, and Sanawar, height 5,750 feet, all in district Simla; and Sheik Budin, height 4,516 feet, in district Dera Ismail Khan. See also list of Punjab Military Stations.

Staples and Manufactures.

The crops chiefly grown in the Punjab are, in the spring harvest, wheat, barley, pulses, oilseeds, vegetables, tobacco and poppy, and in the autumn harvest, millets, maize, rice, cotton, sugar-cane, pulses, oilseeds, vegetables and indigo. The cultivation of tea is almost exclusively confined to the Kangra valley, in which there are about thirty plantations. Of the mineral products of the Punjab, the most important is the rock salt found in the hills of the Salt Range, and Kankar, which consists of irregularly shaped pieces of calcareous concrete, abounds in most districts. It forms the chief material for road-making, and also yields when burnt, an excellent lime for mortar. Alum is produced in large quantities at Kalabagh on the Indus in the Bannu district. Coarse wools are produced in several of the plain districts, and of a better description in the hills, but the finer kinds of wool used in the manufactures of the principal towns, are chiefly obtained from countries beyond the frontier. The cultivation of silk has been attempted in a few places, but without any great success as yet.

Agriculture is the chief occupation of the people, but the manufacturing industry is very considerable and important, silk and cotton goods are extensively made in most of the large towns,—the silks of Mooltan, Amritsur, Lahore, Shujabad and Leia being noted in the Indian markets,—carpets, brocades, cutlery and arms are also extensively manufactured.

Form of Administration.

On the annexation of the Punjab in March 1849, a Board of Administration for its affairs was constituted, to which the Commissioners of the Trans and Cis Sutlej States were also made subordinate. The Board was abolished in February 1853, and its powers and functions were vested in a Chief Commissioner, subordinate to whom a Judicial Commissioner and a Financial Commissioner were appointed. After the transfer of the Delhi territory from the North-Western Provinces, the Punjab and its dependencies were constituted a Lieutenant-Governorship from the 1st January 1859; Sir John Lawrence who had been hitherto the Chief Commissioner, being appointed the first Lieutenant-Governor.

In 1866 a Chief Court, consisting of two judges, a barrister and a civilian, was substituted for the Judicial Commissioner, and which was constituted the final Appellate authority in criminal and civil cases, with powers also of original criminal jurisdiction in cases of European British subjects charged with serious offences. In 1869 a third judge, a civilian, was added to this court,

For administrative purposes the Punjab Province is divided into ten divisions, with an average area of 10,567 square miles, each under the control of a Commissioner. These ten divisions comprise thirty-two districts, with an average area of 3,300 square miles, each under the control of a Deputy Commissioner, and these districts are again sub-divided into 132 tahsil's, or revenue and judicial sub-divisions of districts, with an average area of about 800 square miles, under Tahsildars or sub-divisional officers.

Census.

On the 10th of January 1868, a Census of the British possessions under the Government of the Punjab, was taken, which showed a total population of 17,604,505 souls. At the beginning of 1855 the total population was estimated at not less than 14,668,287 inhabitants, the increase in 13 years amounting to nearly three millions. No later census has been taken, but presuming that the population has increased in the same ratio during the past eleven years, (i.e., from the date of the last census) as it did in the 13 years preceding, it may be roughly calculated that the population of the province at the end of 1878 amounted in round numbers to 20,143,000 souls. The proportion of females to males is a little less than half. The average population per square mile for the whole province was 168 in 1868. Of the total population the agricultural classes compose 55 per cent., non-agricultural 45 per cent. The whole population of the British portion of the Punjab has been classified as follows:—9,334,472 Mahomedans; 6,125,616 Hindus; 1,144,088 Sikhs; 978,198 Aborigines and others, and 22,131 Christians, European, East-Indian, and Native.

BRIEF GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

Area, Position, Boundaries, &c.

The territories under the jurisdiction of the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces lie between the parallels of 23° 51′ and 31° 5′ North, and 77° 4′ and 84° 43′ East Longitude. Inclusive of the territory of Native Feudatory States within the jurisdiction, estimated at 5,125 square miles, they comprise a total area of 86,902 square miles. These provinces are bounded on the North by a part of the Punjab hill state of Bashahr, Chinese Thibet, Oudh (now included in the N.-W. P.) and Nepal; on the South by the Chota Nagpore Division of Bengal, the Rewah State, the Native States of Bundelkhand and the Saugor Division of the Central Provinces; on the East by the Behar Province of Bengal; and on the West by the Native States of Gwalior, Dholpur and Bhurtpore of the Central India Agency, and the river Jumna up to its confluence with the Tonse, beyond which point the latter stream forms the boundary separating the Provinces from the Native States of Sirmur and Jubbal in the Punjab jurisdiction.

Topography, &c.

The greater portion of this territory consists of an alluvial and gently inclined plain, dipping towards the south-east and open on that side. To the south-west this plain abuts upon the outlying spurs of the great elevated plateau of Central India. On the north-east lie the plains of Rohilkhand and Oudh; on the south-east, the plains of the Benares Division. To the south-west of the river Jumna lies the tract called Bundelkhand, which for a few miles from the banks of that river on the south, differs little from the comparatively level country on the north. Beyond this level country, hills appear, at first isolated then gradually assuming the formation of groups and ranges, finally merging in the Khaimur and Vindhya chains, covered with extensive forests and jungle, and traversed by streams that form torrents during the rainy season. Turning to the north we are met by a marshy belt of land known as the 'Tarai,' and between this and the hills, by a belt of waterless jungle, formed of boulders and the debris of the lower ranges of the Himalayas, and extending from four to fourteen miles in breadth, called the 'Bhabar.' To the west of the 'Bhabar' come the Kotla, Patli and Dehra Duns or Valleys. The largest of these 'Duns,' which all lie nearly parallel to the great chain of the Himalayas beyond, is the Dehra Dun, 48 miles long, the centre of which (2,229 feet above the sea level), divides the valley into two portions, with two distinct slopes of drainage to the east and west; the Asnu and Suswa rivers emanate from this central elevation, the former flowing to the Jumna, the latter to the Ganges.

The Himalayan tracts included within these provinces consist of the districts of Kumaun and Garhwal, and native Garhwal or Tehri,—the Kumaun division embracing all the ranges and valleys from the plains to Thibet—and of the tract known as Jaunsar Bawar. The exterior ranges rise to a height of 7,000 or 8,000 feet, increasing gradually in parts, and in some places rising abruptly to this height. The elevation gradually increases again until 10,000 and 11,000 feet are attained in the spurs directly connected with the snowy range, we then meet the peaks of Trisul (22,342 feet), Nandi Debi (25,661 feet), Nandi Kot (22,538 feet) Badrinath and others, all situated to the south of the great central axis of the Himalayas. The Jaunsar Bawar tract comprises similar hilly country lying between the upper courses of the Jumna and Tonse rivers. These tracts form the great timber reserves of the North-Western Provinces.

The principal river of these provinces is the Ganges, rising in the mountains of native Garhwal or Tehri, and flowing with a south-easterly course. On the right bank of this river near Hardwar, the great Ganges Canal is drawn off. The next river in importance is the Jumna, also rising in native Garhwal to the west of the Ganges, and flowing for nearly two-thirds of its course in almost the same direction as the Ganges, finally meeting with it at Allahabad. The discharge of the Jumna as it enters the plains has been estimated at 4,000 cubic feet per second in March, and that of the Ganges at Hardwar at 7,000 cubic feet per second; at Benares the breadth of this last named river during the winter season is 1,400 feet, with an average depth of 35 feet, and a discharge of 19,000 cubic feet per second. During the rainy season the breadth at the same place is 3,000 feet and the rise 43 feet. The other rivers flowing into the Ganges, are the Ramganga rising in the Tarai, the Gumti rising in the swamps of Rohilkhand, and the Gogra, called in its higher course the Kauriala. This last river vies with the Ganges itself in volume and the number of its tributary streams, while it surpasses the Ganges in velocity. On the right bank, the Jumna receives the large rivers that drain the eastern portions of the Rajputana, Central India and Bundelkhand States, viz., the Chambal, the Betwa and the Ken.

The canals of these provinces irrigate nearly one million acres annually and yield a revenue of close upon a quarter of a million sterling. The principal are the Ganges Canal, opened in 1851, consisting of 654 miles of main canal, and 3,078 miles of distributaries, watering a tract of country in the Doab, 320 miles in length and 50 miles in breadth: the Eastern Jumna Canal, opened in 1830, consisting of 130 miles of main canal and 625 miles of distributaries, watering a tract 120 miles long and 15 miles broad: the Agra Canal, opened in 1874, 75 miles in length, irrigating about 400,000 acres: the Dehra Dun Canal, 67 miles in length, irrigating about 13,000 acres: and the canals in the Hamirpur and Jhansi districts, with a total length of 33 miles. Besides these there are other minor canals in Rohilkhand, opened at various times since 1874, for irrigating the belt of country along the Tarai where much rice is raised.

The East-Indian Railway (1,279¾ miles in length) runs through the middle of these provinces up to the city of Delhi. From Allahabad a line to Jubbulpore (223½ miles in length) connects the East-Indian Railway with the Great Indian Peninsular Railway. The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway (547¾ miles in length) joins the East-Indian Railway at Benares, Cawnpore and Aligarh. The Sind, Punjab and Delhi Railway (553¾ miles in length) runs from Ghaziabad on the East-Indian line, to Lahore and Mooltan in the Punjab, viâ Meerut, Saharanpur and Umballa. The State Railway from Agra viâ Bhurtpore joins the Rajputana State Railway, running from Delhi to Jeypore and Ajmere. The Sindhia State Railway (69 miles in length) runs from Agra to Gwalior viâ Dholpur. There are other light Railways connected with important centres of the East-Indian and Oudh and Rohilkhand lines, viz:—The Hathras and Muttra line, length 29 miles, in full working order, the extension to Achnera from Muttra being in course of construction; the Ghazipur and Dildarnagar line, length 12 miles; the Cawnpore and Farukhabad line, length 84 miles also under construction; while surveys are in progress for the Cawnpore and Mau Ranipur line, the Manikpur and Banda line, the Bareilly and Pilibhit line, the Sitapur, Lucknow and Rae Bareilly line, the Balramghat extension to Bahraich and Gorakhpur viâ Gonda and Basti, the Jaunpur and Azamgarh line, the Moradabad and Ramnagar line, and the Roorkee and Dehra line viâ Hardwar. The whole of the North-Western Provinces are also well supplied with first-class metalled roads, the chief of which is the Grand Trunk Road, running through the principal towns of the Doab.

Climate and Sanataria.

With the exception of the Tarai, the districts of these provinces are as a rule healthy. The climate is however subject to great extremes, the cold of winter being severe and the heat of summer almost intolerable. The hot westerly winds of April, May and June are especially trying to European constitutions. The cold season commences with the close of the rains in October and lasts until April in the upper districts; in the Benares Division it may be considered to extend from November until the beginning of March. The hot weather succeeds and lasts until the beginning of the rains, which set in usually about the latter end of June and continue until the middle of October. The thermometer during the hot weather months ranges from 86° to 109° in the shade, the average being about 94°. The average yearly rain-fall in the plains is from 30 to 45 inches, increasing gradually towards the hills, where Mussoorie receives 90 inches and Naini Tal 115 inches. The climate of the Benares Division is more moist and cool, and partakes somewhat of the character of that of Bengal. The Sanataria of the North-Western Provinces, seven in number, are the following, viz :—Chakrata, height 6,885 feet; Mussoorie, height 7,026 feet; and Landour, height 7,459 feet, in district Dehra Dun. Ranikhet, height 6,885 feet; Naini Tal, height 6,568 feet; Almora, height 5,074 feet; and Pithoragarh, height 5,468 feet, in district Kumaun. See also list of Military stations at page 35.

Staples and Manufactures.

The principal crops grown and exported are cotton, opium, indigo, rice, barley, maize, sugar-cane, wheat, potatoes, oilseeds, and the millets; tobacco, lacdye, safflower, and saltpetre are also exported. Tea is largely grown in the Dehra Dun and Kumaun districts, and potatoes are extensively produced in several districts, having become one of the great food staples of the country. The North-Western Provinces are not rich in minerals, but iron, lead and copper-ores abound in Kumaun; kankar, an inferior kind of limestone, much used for roads and building purposes, is very abundant. The principal manufactures are sugar at Shahjahanpur, leather at Cawnpore, carpets and embroidery at Mirzapore, and kimkhwábs (gold brocades) at Benares. Brass and copper utensils for cooking purposes, cabinet work and cutlery are manufactured in every considerable town.

Form of Administration.

The Lieutenant-Governor is the chief executive authority in these provinces, which for administrative purposes is divided into seven divisions embracing 35 districts, each division is under the superintendence of a Commissioner and each district under a Magistrate-Collector. The districts are again sub-divided into tahsils or sub-divisions, each under a native Tahsildar or Sub-Collector. Certain districts are regulation while others are non-regulation. The Regulation districts are those in which all the laws and regulations applicable to these provinces are in force; the Non-Regulation districts are those to which only certain portions of the law have been extended. They form the Kumaun and Jhansi divisions, also the Tarai. The chief executive officers of the non-regulation districts are styled Deputy Commissioners, having civil, criminal and revenue powers. In the regulation districts besides the Magistrate-Collector, there are three classes of Civil Judges, all subordinate to the High Court at Allahabad, the seat of Government.

Census.

The last census taken of the North-Western Provinces was in 1872. In 1848, 1853 and 1865 enumerations of the population were made, with increasing accuracy on each successive occasion. In 1865 the total population recorded was 29,684,347; in 1872 the population numbered 30,776,442 souls. The increase has been 3·65 per cent.; while the Hindu population shows an increase of from 25,495,871 in 1865 to 26,542,600 in 1872, the Mahomedans appear to have remained almost stationary, their total for 1872 showing 4,186,913 against 4,188,476 in 1865. The population per square mile for the whole of the North-Western Provinces was 376 in 1872, and was classified as follows:—

21,626 Christians, Europeans, East Indians and Natives; 4,186,913 Mahomedans; 26,542,600 Hindus; 14,159 Buddhists and Jains, and 11,144 Aborigines and others. The agricultural population is 56 per cent. of the whole. The district and city of Benares are the most populous in these provinces.

BRIEF GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

Area, Position, Boundaries, &c.

The Province of Oudh, which was annexed by the British Government under the administration of Lord Dalhousie in 1856, was at first a separate Chief Commissionership under the Supreme Government, it was afterwards incorporated with the North-Western Provinces, on the 1st January 1877, the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces, bearing the additional title of Chief Commissioner of Oudh.

The Province is situated in the middle valley of the Ganges, which river forms its Southern boundary; on the East and West it is enclosed by the older acquired districts of the North-Western Provinces, with Jaunpur, Basti and Azámgarh on one side, and Shahjahanpur, Farukhabad and Cawnpore on the other; on the North the boundary, partly natural and partly artificial, marches with that of the independent kingdom of Nepal. Its greatest length from North-West to South-East is 234 miles, and its breadth 150 miles. Oudh lies between 25° 34′ and 29° 6′ North Latitude, and 79° 45′ and 83° 11′ East Longitude. The total area of the Province is 23,954 square miles, of which 13,126 square miles are cultivated with crops; 952 square miles are covered with orchards of mango and mohwa trees; 1,134 square miles, or about 6½ per cent. of the total area, are covered with lakes, ponds and rivers; 478 square miles are occupied by the sites of towns and villages; 243 square miles with roads; 1,642 square miles, or about 7 per cent., are barren waste, and of the remainder, 825 square miles are Government Forests, while 5,554 square miles, or about 22 per cent. of the whole, are arable waste.

Topography, &c.

The general surface of the country is a plain sloping from North-West to South-East, varied here and there with almost imperceptible undulations, the highest part of the country being the high land north of Dudwah Ghat in Khairagarh, which is 600 feet above sea level, while the lowest point, on the border of the Jaunpur district, is 230 feet. The first or lower chain of the Himalayas, which bounds the province on the North-East along the Gonda district, is from 2,500 to 4,000 feet in height. This chain is one of four parallel ranges running through Nepal, each loftier and more remote, one rising a little above the other, all of which are distinctly visible in the rains from Fyzabad and Sitapur, a distance of nearly 200 miles. The main rivers are the Ganges, which runs along its southern boundary, the Gumti, the Sarda, the Kauriala and Gogra, the Ramganga, the Sai and the Rapti. Their aggregate dry weather discharge is 18,800 cubic feet per second, and the entire river discharge reaches 20,000 cubic feet, or half the quantity of the five rivers of the Punjab; their channels lie on an average from 20 to 50 feet below the level of the country. The rivers of the province afford about 1,350 miles of navigable stream. Numerous Jhils or marshes exist, only two of which however can be dignified with the name of lakes, viz., Behti in district Partabgarh, and Sandi in district Hardoi. The forests of Oudh lie principally in the districts of Kheri, Bahraich and Gonda, on the North.

The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway runs through the entire length of the Province, connecting with the East-Indian Railway at Benares, Cawnpore and Aligarh. Surveys are in progress for branch-feeders to this line as detailed already at page 37.

Oudh is a tropical country, a little smaller than Scotland, and somewhat larger than Denmark, but with a population more than double that of both countries put together. The country along the northern frontier is thinly populated.

Climate.

Though the climate is subject to extremes of temperature, sometimes rising to 112 in the summer and sinking to 35° in the winter, it may be briefly described as a mean between that of the Punjab and North-Western Provinces, and that of Bengal, for while the cold is not so great, nor the dry heats so intense as in the former, the difference in the seasons is far more marked than in the lower Provinces of Bengal with their moister though more equable temperature. Its three seasons, the cold, the hot and the rainy, are well defined, the first extending from early in October to end of March, the second following, and the third commencing with fair regularity in the middle of June and lasting to the middle of October. To a European the climate of Oudh during the short cold season seems nearly perfect. The plains are subject to hot sultry winds from the west and occasional fierce hurricanes.

Staples and Manufactures.

A large amount of wheat and other edible grains is produced in and exported from Oudh; sugar, tobacco, saltpetre and oilseeds are also produced and exported in considerable quantities. Some of the Oudh rice and tobacco are of superior quality. The population being essentially agricultural, the province can boast of no manufactures worth mentioning.

Except minute particles of gold, which are washed down by the hill torrents in quantities too infinitessimal to repay their collection, valuable minerals are not known to exist. Kankar or carbonate of lime exists all over the province, and is used for the production of lime for building, and for roads.

Form of Administration.

The administration of Oudh is carried on under the Non-Regulation system by the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces, who is also styled Chief Commissioner of Oudh, (vide the opening paragraph of this description). For administrative purposes the province is divided into four divisions, each controlled by a Commissioner, and subordinate to Commissioners are 12 Deputy Commissioners, each holding executive charge of a district. In every district there are three or more subdivisions, the direct management of each being entrusted to a native Sub-Collector, or Tahsildar. There are 44 such sub-divisions in the 12 districts of this province.

Census.

There has been but one Census in Oudh, taken on the night of the 1st February, 1869. The Area of the Province being 23,954 square miles, and the population as shewn by the Census Returns, 11, 220,232, there were then 468 persons to each square mile. In density of population Oudh surpasses most parts of India and no European country approaches it. The Census Returns classify the population as follows:—1,201,253 Mahomedans; 9,971,236 Hindus; 7,531 Christians; 40,212 Soldiers and Prisoners, European and Native.

Notes on the above States.

Cooch Behar.—This State is under the Commissioner, Rajshahye and Cooch Behar Division.

Hill Tipperah.—This State is under no specific engagement to the British Government, though the Maharaja is a British Zemindar, deriving the greatest portion of his income from landed property in the adjoining regulation district of Tipperah. This Prince pays a succession duty to the Paramount Power, and is now practically a Feudatory under a Political Agent. The succession duty is half a year's Revenue of the State in the case of direct, and a whole year's Revenue in the case of indirect successions. There are no mines in the state, nor manufactures beyond those required for the commonest necessaries of life. The dialect of this state is Kuki.

Garhjat States, Chota Nagpore.—These Chiefs are exempted from the operations of the ordinary laws. They dispose of civil matters and minor criminal cases, sending up heinous offences for the orders of the Commissioner, who exercises a general control over their administration in other respects. Kharsawan, Seraikela and Dhalbhum, although still under Tributary Chiefs, are now treated as parts of the British district of Singhbhoom ; their area, population and revenue, though given here, have not been included in the statement for 'Feudatory India' at page 10.

Orissa Tributary States.—The same remarks apply to these States. Two of them, Angul and Banki, have lapsed to the British Government, owing to the misconduct of their chiefs.

Sikkim.—This is a subsidized state connected with Darjeeling. (See "Outlying Independent States.")

Excepting Sikkim, the population of these states is given from the last detailed census and may be considered reliable. The precise Revenues derived by the Rajahs from their estates are not generally known, the estimates have been made from the best available sources. The Military Force of the Orissa States, though large in figures, is absolutely contemptible, the men generally perform the duties of Police.

BRIEF GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

Area, Position, Boundaries, &c.

The territory under the administration of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, comprising the four provinces of Bengal Proper, Behar, Chota Nagpore, and Orissa, lies between 19° 28′ and 27° 30′ North Latitude, and 81° 35′ and 92° 46′ East Longitude. These provinces, constituting the Bengal Government, are bounded on the North by the independent native states of Nepal, Sikkim, and Bhutan; on the East by the province of Assam, the hilly country occupied by the Lushai and Kuki tribes, and the Arakan Hills and District of the British Burmah Province; the South is washed by the sea known as the Bay of Bengal; and on the South-West and West by the Ganjam district of the Madras Presidency, the Central Provinces, the Rewah Native State, and districts Mirzapur, Benares, Ghazipur and Gorakhpur of the North-Western Provinces. The total area of this jurisdiction is 193,581 square miles, inclusive of 38,379 square miles belonging to the Native Feudatory States connected therewith.

Topography, &c.

Broadly speaking, the chief characteristics of these extensive provinces are, the plain of the Lower Ganges sloping from the north-west; the plain of the Lower Brahmaputra, from the foot of the Garo Hills, sloping due south; and the great Delta of Bengal. On the south-west of these great plains rise the high lands of Chota Nagpore and Orissa; on the east are the Chittagong, Tipperah, Garo, Khasi, and other hills; on the north is the hilly Darjeeling District and the Bengal Himalayas.

Bengal Proper is the great alluvial and deltaic plain between the Himalayas and the Bay of Bengal.

Behar is the Gangetic plain lying between Bengal proper and the North-Western Provinces. In Behar is also included a narrow range of hills in the Sonthal Parganas, known as the Rajmahal.

Chota (or Chutia) Nagpore is the elevated and hilly country west of Bengal Proper, south of Behar, and north of Orissa.

Orissa comprises a long flat deluvial strip between the hills and the sea, (forming one settled province), and a large hilly tract beyond occupied by tributary states.

The greater part of Bengal Proper and Behar are uninterrupted flats subject to inundation, rich in black mould and most fertile, the Dacca Division being so fertile that it has been called the granary of Bengal.

Turning to the mountains we have in the small part of the Himalayan chain coming within the Bengal jurisdiction, elevations varying from 7,000 feet above the sea at Darjeeling on the south, to lofty Kanchinjinga, 28,000 feet, on the north-west. The Rajmahal hills in the Sonthal Parganas, ending with the town of that name on the Ganges, form the eastern projection of the Central Indian formation running through the Chota Nagpore province, which is hilly throughout. Several broken detached hills, some of considerable height, appear as irregular links of the main chain; the largest of these is Parasnath rising to a height of 4,488 feet above the sea. A continuation of the same Central Indian formation runs through the tributary states of Orissa, with varying elevations of from 2,000 to 4,000 feet above the sea. On the east, the mountainous tracts of Hill Tipperah and Chittagong are a continuation of the Manipur and Lushai ranges, with elevations rising to 11 and 12,000 feet.

The Ganges river touches the Behar Province at Buxar, on the East India Railway, and enters it near Chupra, where the Gogra from the north meets it. It then receives the Soane on the south, and the Gandak and Kosi again on the north, all rivers of considerable volume. Turning the corner of the Rajmahal hills, the Ganges flows with its greatest body of water in a south-easterly direction, when the Bhagirati first flows away from it on the west side to form the Hooghly, the most navigable of its many mouths. The main stream continuing its course, and throwing off several channels to form the Delta, meets the main stream of the Brahmaputra (known here as the Jamuna) at Goalundo, the terminus of the Eastern Bengal Railway, the amalgamated column then empties itself by numerous channels into the Bay of Bengal.

From these rivers the Gangetic Delta is formed. Between the cultivated portions of this Delta and the sea is a tract bearing the general name of the Sundarbans, covered with dense forest, and which, owing to the inroads of the sea and wild beasts, as well as its general unhealthiness, has baffled the enterprise of modern man. The area of this tract is about 5,340 square miles.

The other rivers of these provinces are, on the east, the Megna (called in its upper course the Surma), which is the high road to Cachar as it affords good water communication for the greater part of its length; the Fenny, rising in Hill Tipperah and the Karnafuli rising in the highlands of the Lushai country. The two last flow into the Bay of Bengal.

On the west of the great Gangetic Delta, not helping however to form it, but joining the Hooghly between Calcutta and Saugor Island, are the Damuda, the Rupnarain and the Cossye, all rising in the highlands of Chota Nagpore.

The Subaranrekha also rising in Chota Nagpore; the Baitarni and Brahmani, rising in the highlands of Orissa, and the Mahanadi rising in the Central Provinces, flow eastwards into the Bay of Bengal.

The East-Indian Railway runs through the middle of these provinces from Calcutta up to Buxar; a portion of it from Kanoo Junction running due north, and then turning due west, joins the line again at Lakhiserai; this portion is called the "Loop" line, to distinguish it from the straight or "Chord" line connecting these two stations. The Tirhoot State Railway (82 miles in length) runs from Barh on the East-Indian line to Tirhoot, with a branch to Durbhangah. The Nulhati State Railway (27 miles in length) branches off from Nulhati station on the East-Indian Railway to Azimganj. The Eastern Bengal Railway (172 miles in length) runs from Calcutta to Goalundo, tapping the Eastern Districts of Bengal, while the South-Eastern State Railway (28 miles in length) connects Calcutta with Port Canning. The Northern Bengal State Railway (219 miles in length), tapping the principal jute, rice and tobacco exporting districts of Northern Bengal and the tea growing country at the foot of the Himalayas, leaves the Eastern Bengal Railway at Porada station, and after crossing the river at Sara runs to Siligori, 30 miles from Darjeeling*; a branch line from Parbattipur station runs to Rungpore to be eventually extended to Dhubri. The Gya State Railway (57 miles in length) branches off from Patna city, on the East-Indian line, to the town of Gya.

The Grand Trunk road runs direct from Calcutta to Benares and is the great highway for traffic in those portions of Behar and Chota Nagpore not having Railway communication. In the Deltaic country of Bengal, water communication is much availed of, hence Bengal Proper is not so well supplied with roads as the other Bengal Provinces.

The Canals of these provinces lie principally in Orissa and Behar. The Orissa scheme as it is termed, embraces the Kendrapara canal with branch to Gundukia on the Gobri river, length 39 miles, irrigating about 100,000 acres. The Patamundi branch, length 40m iles; the Taldanda (27 miles) and Machgong (30 miles) canals, irrigating about 50,000 acres; the High Level canal for irrigation and navigation, running from Calcutta to Cuttack viâ Midnapore, a length of 52 miles. The other canals are, the Midnapore canal connecting Midnapore with tide water in the Hooghly at Oolabaria, 16 miles below Calcutta, having a navigable length of 53 miles; the Tidal canal, length 28 miles, connecting the rivers Hooghly, Haldi and Russulpur in the Hidgelee portion of the Midnapore District; the Soane canals for the irrigation of South Behar, to be extended eventually to Mirzapore on one side and to Monghyr on the other, with branches and distributaries in the districts of Shahabad, Gya and Patna; the Arrah canal, 65 miles; the Western main canal, 22 miles; the Patna canal, 86½ miles; and the Buxar canal, 45 miles. Jhils or extensive shallow lakes are very numerous, but their limits are generally ill defined. The most extensive and remarkable are the Monda Jhil, the Dulabari Jhil and the Chullam Jhil in the district of Rajshahye, the Aka Jhil in the district of Jessore and the great Jhil in the district of Backergunge.

Climate.

Although these four Provinces, (Bengal Proper, Behar, Chota Nagpore and Orissa) under the Bengal Government are situated for the most part without the Tropical Zone, their climate is characteristically tropical. In the annual range of their temperature, as well as in point of humidity and rainfall, the eastern and western portions of the whole country which includes them, are strongly contrasted. The mean temperature of the whole year is 82° in Orissa and Behar, and 73° in the Chittagong and Dacca Divisions. In Orissa and the western part of the Gangetic Delta, December is the coldest month of the year, elsewhere the mean temperature of January is somewhat lower. During the rains the temperature of the Hazaribagh plateau falls more rapidly than that of any other part of Bengal. Between May and October the fall at Hazaribagh is rather more than 11°, while at Berhampore in the Delta, and in about the same latitude, it is only 4½°, and at Calcutta a little more than 3°, even at Patna it does not exceed 8°. The high humidity of the atmosphere in Bengal Proper, and more especially in its eastern districts, has become proverbial. The average annual humidity of a large portion of Bengal is however sensibly lower than that of England. The quantity of vapour in the air of Calcutta is on the average of the year about twice as great as in that of London. The absolute humidity of the atmosphere is greatest on the coast of Orissa and the Sundarbans and diminishes inland as the distance from the sea increases. In the cold weather and spring months, this decrease is rapid everywhere except in Eastern Bengal.

* Note.—A company for the purpose of constructing, maintaing and working a steam tramway between the terminus of the Northern Bengal State Railway at Siligori and the Station of Darjeeling has been started with Government aid.

The districts of Eastern Bengal, more especially those of the Chittagong Division, show the heaviest rainfall. In this division the average annual fall almost everywhere amounts to upwards of 100 inches. In the Darjeeling and Jalpaiguri districts, on the exposed hill flanks and at their base, even this large amount is greatly surpassed. The rainfall is also higher on the plains of the coast, than on those lying more inland. By far the greater part of the rainfall of the Province falls between the months of June and October, showers also occur in the hot weather months, and in the months of February and March hail storms are not unfrequent. In the eastern districts rain occurs occasionally in the cold weather months, but is less common in the Delta and the country further westward. During February, March, April and May the prevailing wind is from the south. The climate of Orissa is by no means as healthy as the other portions of these provinces. The climate of Behar and of Chota Nagpore is not unlike that of the North-Western Provinces in its eastern districts, while that of the Bengal Delta or Bengal Proper may be summed up as follows for the different months of the year:—"January—Air serene and cold. Winds N. and N. W. Fog in early morning and heavy dews at night. Thermometer minimum 58° maximum 76°, mean 67°. February—Pleasant and cool till the middle. Wind then changes to S and S. E. Thermometer 65° to 83°, mean 74°. March—The hot season begins; the sun is powerful and the days warm. Strong winds from the south. Storms from the N. W. towards middle and end, accompanied by violent gusts, with clouds of dust, followed by rain. Thermometer 74° to 86°, mean 80°. April—South wind moderating the heat till the 20th, when the wind becomes hot sometimes. Thunderstorms and rain. Thermometer 79° to 91°, mean 85°. May—Very disagreeable. Air close, still and oppressive. Nights very sultry, wind light and from south, but storms frequent with thunder and rain. Thermometer 81° to 93°, mean 87°. June to September—This is the rainy season. In the second week of June the wind veers round to the east and after several days of close muggy weather, the rains commence and continue with little intermission till October. The atmosphere during these months is cooler and the weather is generally pleasant, but the damp is extreme and everything gets mouldy. Thermometer 78° to 90°, mean 84°. October—Is a variable month. The rains are breaking up and the winds changing. The days are sultry, but the mornings and evenings are cool, the air becomes clear and night dews recommence. Mean temperature 79°. November—delightfully fair and pleasant. Cold sharp winds blow from the North West. The air is dry, pure, clear and calm with no clouds. Mean temperature 74°. December—Days clear and fine, but fogs at night and early morning. North and west winds prevail, blowing sharply. Thermometer 58° to 78°, mean 68°.

Staples and Manufactures.

Rice, the principal food grain of the people, is cultivated and consumed over the whole of Eastern, Western, and Central Bengal and Orissa, and these parts are the principal rice producing tracts. The coarse rice is usually consumed locally, while that grown in winter and spring is exported. In Behar and Chota Nagpore also, rice is a main staple of food though alternated with wheat, maize and other cereals. Dall (pulses) of various kinds, and fruit and vegetables, of every description, form an invariable part of the food of the people throughout these provinces.

The commercial staples are jute, hemp, oilseeds, ginger, turmeric, cotton, cocoa-nuts, date-sugar, tobacco, sugar-cane, betel-nut, betel-leaf, indigo, tea, silk, opium, lac, lacdye, safflower, saltpetre, cinchona and ipecacuanha. Next to rice, jute forms the staple product of the country. The Districts of Bengal which grow it most largely, are Rungpore, Mymensingh, Bogra, Dacca, Pubna, Dinagepore, Hoogly and 24 Pergunnahs, the best quality coming from Rungpore and Mymensingh. Serajganj is one of the principal marts for this staple. The manufacture of date-sugar is very extensively carried on in the deltaic districts of Jessore, Nuddea, Furreedpore and 24-Pergunnahs. Tobacco is largely grown in Rungpore, Tirhoot and Purneah for trade and export. Tea is cultivated to a greater or lesser extent in Dacca, Darjeeling, Jalpaiguri, Chittagong and Chota Nagpore. The following statement gives further particulars in regard to the tea cultivation in Bengal, in 1878.

Indigo is largely cultivated in the districts of Nuddea and Jessore, over the whole of Central Bengal, in Purneah, and westward throughout Behar north of the Ganges, and constitutes the principal industry of these parts. In Behar south of the Ganges, the cultivation is very small, and in the Chittagong, Orissa and Chota Nagpore divisions it is not grown. The cultivation of opium is a Government monopoly and is principally carried on in Behar. Silk is a principal industry over a considerable part of the Rajshahye and Burdwan divisions. Cinchona and Ipecacuanha are produced in the Darjeeling district. All over these provinces the manufacture of beads of sorts and wicker and basket work are very generally spread occupations, and the usual local handicrafts are carried on, for the supply of local demands. Weaving and the manufacture of cotton thread are the occupation of a large number of the inhabitants of every district.

The different manufactures which are specially carried on in the several divisions of the Bengal Provinces, and for which each part is most celebrated, are summed up as follows :—

Burdwan Division.—Silk, indigo and metal pots and pans. Lac, rope and yarn factories. Screw-presses for cotton, jute and fibres. Steam, flour, paper and jute mills. Iron foundries.

Presidency Division.—Indigo and date-sugar are the staple manufactures in this division. The others are cotton-cloth, shell-lime and brass utensils. There are also several jute and cotton mills and screw-presses, as well as other factories and foundries.

Rajshahye Division.—Silk and indigo are the principal manufactures, the others are silk cloth, brass utensils, gunny bags, gold and silver filagree work and ivory articles.

Dacca Division.—There is no manufacture on a wholesale scale in this division except tea and indigo ; cocoanut oil and date-sugar are made and exported to Chittagong and Calcutta. The other manufactures are brass and iron utensils, lacdye, soap and paper.

Chittagong Division.—The principal industries are carpentry, ship and boat building, blacksmith's, brazier's, gold and silversmith's work.

Patna Division.—The principal manufactures are indigo, opium, saltpetre, sugar, and sugar-candy. The minor manufactures, are towelling and table-linen, tobacco, paper, blankets and brass utensils.

Bhagalpur Division.—The principal manufactures of this division are indigo and silk.

cabinet-ware, fire-arms and hardware; baskets, inlaid and fancy work are the other industries.

Orissa Division.—Salt manufacture is the staple of this division. Brass vessels, brass and silver ornaments and coarse cloths are the chief articles made.

Chota Nagpore Division.—Coarse cloth, soapstone vessels, tusser-silk, lac and tea are the chief articles manufactured.

Of the mineral resources of Bengal, coal only has been largely developed. Iron, however, is at least as abundant as coal in many places, and is found in the closest conjunction with coal in large tracts where limestone is also plentiful. The largest and best coal mines of Bengal are at Raneegunge in the Burdwan District, and in the Chota Nagpore Division, where there are great stores of coal for future ages. Coal is also found in the Sonthal Parganas, but of a poorer description. Lead, silver and copper are found in Bhagalpur, and stone quarries are worked in the districts of Monghyr and Gya. Little is known of the mineral resources of Darjeeling. Petroleum and coal are spoken of as existing, copper and limestone are known to exist. Iron ore has been discovered in the Salmyé Hills in Tipperah, and coal in the Chittagong Hill Tracts. Throughout the delta and low-lying alluvial tracts comprising the Presidency, Rajshahye and Dacca Divisions, and alluvial country of Orissa, there are neither mines nor minerals. In the hilly tracts of the tributary mehals further inland, there are valuable beds of iron ore, particularly in Taljharee, where iron and coal are found side by side. Rich iron ore is also found and worked extensively by natives in the Orissa States of Dhenkanal and Keonjhar

Form of Administration.

The Lieutenant-Governor is the chief executive authority in these provinces, which for administrative purposes have been divided into nine divisions, embracing 43 districts, each division being under the superintendenee of a Commissioner, and each district under a District Officer, who is the unit of executive administration whether in the Regulation or Non-Regulation districts, and who, in the one case, is styled Magistrate and Collector, and in the other, Deputy Commissioner. The District Officer is the executive chief and administrator of the tract of country committed to his charge, and is supreme in the district, except in so far as regards the proceedings of the Courts of Justice. Each district is again subdivided into tahsils or sub-divisions, under subordinate magisterial and revenue authorities, styled Sub-divisional Officers, who are either Assistants or Magistrates in charge. Sub-divisions are again divided into thanas or police circles, where there are also Sub-Deputies to strengthen the executive influence of Sub-divisional officers. In revenue matters, the Commissioners of divisions are in their turn subject to the Board of Revenue, in other matters they are directly under the Lieutenant-Governor. The legislative authority in Bengal is the council of the Lieutenant-Governor, for the purpose of making laws and regulations. The Lieutenant-Governor is president of this council, and before any law comes into force, it must have received the assent of the Governor General as well as that of the Lieutenant-Governor. The Marine Administration is under a Master Attendant, and the affairs of the Port of Calcutta, are entrusted to Port Commissioners. The Judicial organization of the whole of these Provinces is entrusted to Judges, subordinate to a High Court, whose functions are exclusively judicial.

Calcutta has a special administration of its own, with a separate establishment of Police under control of a Commissioner, also Magistrates of Police for administration of criminal justice. The affairs of the Municipality and Municipal Taxation are managed by a Chairman and Board of Justices, while the Customs and Stamps are under the superintendence of a Board of Revenue.

Census.

The Census of Bengal, which was effected in 1871-72, was the first census of the country that had ever been attempted. The computation gave 60,357,141 as the total number of persons under the Bengal Administration, far exceeding that of any previous estimate, and showing an average density for the whole of the four provinces, of 389 persons to the square mile. In the United Kingdom the density is 262, in Germany 189, in France 180. Separately, the density for Bengal Proper is 481, for Behar 462, for Chota Nagpore 141, and for Orissa 377 per square mile. The total population for the four provinces is classified as follows:—Christians, Europeans 17,387; Eurasians 21,410; Natives 55,297; Hindus 38,843,179; Mahomedans 19,559,017; Others 1,860,851. The sexes are pretty equally divided, particularly in Bengal Proper.

Notes on the above states.

There are no Tributary States in direct relation with the Assam administration. Manipur is a dependent state on the Eastern border and under the supervision of a Political Agent acting under the direct orders of the Supreme Government; only in boundary matters has the Chief Commissioner any direct concern in the politics of Manipur. The Military Forces of Manipur are :—Artillery 500, Cavalry 400, Infantry 4,400. See 'Outlying Independent States.'

The Siems and Sirdars of the Khasi Hills hold a sort of semi-independent position. Their appointment is subject to the confirmation of the British Government, which can remove them in case of oppression or misconduct. The Khasi Hill States cover an area of 4,490 square miles. These states keep no Military Forces, nor do they pay any tribute. They are all in subsidiary alliance with the British Government.

BRIEF GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

Area, Position, Boundaries, &c.

The Province of Assam lies on the north-east extremity of the Indian Empire, with Bhutan and Thibet beyond it on the north, and Burmah on the east, and between Latitudes 28° 15′ and 24° 0′ North, and Longitudes 89° 45′ and 97° 5′ East, and has an area of 52,731 square miles. The immediate boundaries of Assam are, on the north, Bhutan and the range of hills inhabited by savage sub-Himalayan tribes. On the north-east are the Mishmi Hills which sweep round the head of the Brahmaputra Valley. On the east, are the mountain ranges of the Burmese frontier, and intervening hills inhabited by unsubdued wild tribes, the Patkoi range and Manipur Native State. On the south, are the Bengal districts of Mymensingh and Tipperah, with Hill Tipperah Native State. On the west, it is bounded by the Bengal districts of Rungpore, and Jalpaiguri, and the Native State of Cooch Behar.

The outer boundary on the north of districts Goalpara, Kamrup and Darrang, has been accurately laid down and defined, beyond this the outer line of boundary of districts Nowgong, Lakhimpur, Sibsagar, Naga Hills and Cachar, touching upon the hills of the adjoining wild tribes, is indefinite; another line of boundary, known as the 'Inner line', has therefore been laid down for these districts, with the object of restricting the dealings of Europeans and other British subjects with the wild frontier tribes, no person being allowed to cross this inner line without a pass.

Topography, &c.

The Province comprises the two valleys of the Brahmaputra (the son of Brahma) and Surma rivers, and the central hill tracts of the Garo Hills, the Khasi and Jaintia Hills, and the Naga Hills, which separate them.

Assam Proper, or the valley of the Brahmaputra, is a long alluvial plain about 450 miles in length, and of an average width of 50 miles, shut in by mountains on the north, east and south. The river Brahmaputra flows throughout its entire length, and a little above Dhubri bends abruptly to the south, continuing its course to its confluence with the Ganges at Goalundo, the present terminus of the Eastern Bengal Railway. Little is known of the upper course of this river, which has been generally identified with the Sangpo or Narichu Sangpo of Thibet. In Assam the Brahmaputra is navigable by river steamers and large cargo boats as far as Dibrugarh at all seasons of the year, and in the rains by steamers even as far as Sadiya, a hundred miles further up; much beyond this place it is not navigable owing to the rapidity of the current. At Goalpara, the discharge during its lowest ebb, amounts to 146,200 cubic feet per second; during the rains it attains a height of from thirty to forty feet above its common level, the discharge then has been computed at four times the above quantity.

The valley of the Surma or Barak river comprises the two districts of Sylhet and Cachar. On the north this valley is shut in by the Khasi, Jaintia and Naga Hills, on the east by the Manipur Hills, and on the south by the Lushai and Tipperah Hills. The western and eastern portions of this valley differ considerably in their physical features; the western portion, comprising the district of Sylhet, is for the most part a large alluvial plain averaging some seventy miles in width, and traversed by numerous streams and water courses, which, during the rainy season from June to October, flood the country. In the eastern portion comprising the district of Cachar, the valley narrows. The Surma river, (uniting ultimately with the Megna in Bengal), rising among the mountains to the north of Manipur, flows for about 180 miles through a mountainous country, and becomes navigable only in the plains portion of Cachar.

The Central Hill tracts of the Naga Hills, the Khasi and Jaintia Hills and the Garo Hills, are a continuation of the mountainous chain which sweeps round the head of the Brahmaputra valley. Each range has marked physical features of its own. In the Naga Hills the main ridge, named the Barail, with its ranges and spurs, is remarkably precipitous in character, and towers to a height of 10,000 feet above the sea level. The peculiar features of the Khasi and Jaintia Hills is the abruptness with which they rise on the southern face, almost perpendicularly from the Surma valley, attaining rapidly an altitude of over 6,000 feet, the upper plateaux and main central tracts consisting of a succession of undulating downs covered mostly with short grass. The hill station of Shillong, the seat of Government, is situated about the centre of this tract. The Garo Hills terminate this chain and present very similar characteristics, being steep and precipitous on the southern face and of rather lower general elevation, the highest part being not more than 4,700 feet above sea level, and below which Tura the capital is situated.

Climate and Sanataria.

The climate of Assam is superior to that of Bengal, the day-heat being more moderate, and the nights being always cool and refreshing. The climate of the hill districts in the higher and central plateaux is very salubrious, and the seasons throughout the province are generally favorable for agricultural operations.

At Shillong the average maximum temperature is about 62°, the minimum 59°, the general mean being about 61°. The average mean summer temperature in the valleys of the Brahmaputra and Surma (or Barak) rivers is 80°, the winter temperature about 57°, the annual mean temperature being about 70°.

The rains are of long continuance, lasting from March to October, and cloudless skies, proverbially characteristic of India, are but little seen in this province. In the Brahmaputra valley, the morning fog, which invariably prevails in the cold season, is a special characteristic; it rises about day-light and often lasts as long as eleven in the forenoon. The annual rainfall at Cherrapoonjee and along the southern face of the Khasi and Garo Hills, reaches 600 to 620 inches, incessant rain pouring sometimes for eight and ten days at a stretch.

The prevalent winds throughout the year in both valleys blow from the north-east. At the commencement of the rains a westerly wind occasionally sets in, but rarely lasts for any length of time. In Cachar the north-east wind, which blows up to mid-day, usually changes to a south-west wind in the afternoon. During the months of March, April and May, violent winds from the north-west are of frequent occurrence throughout the Province.

At Cherrapoonjee, in spite of the notorious heavy rainfall, the climate is by no means unhealthy. Earthquakes are very common both in the plains and hill districts, but the shocks are seldom severe. They occur chiefly in November, December and January. Shillong, in the Khasi Hills, is the sanatarium of the Assam Province.

Staples and Manufactures.

Rice is the principal food grain throughout the province. Next to rice the most important crop is the mustard; the other staples grown are pulses of various kinds, indian-corn, linseed, hemp, jute, betel-leaf (pan), betel-nut, sugar-cane, cotton, and tobacco. Indigenous arrowroot, and tapioca have also been found in Sylhet. The principal products of the hill districts are, potatoes, oranges, pine-apples, bay-leaves, cinnamon, blackpepper, betel-nut and leaves, honey, wax, cotton-silk, and caoutchouc, the three former articles being largely exported.

The most important commercial staple is Tea which is largely cultivated in all the plain districts with the exception of Goalpara. The total outturn of manufactured tea from lands under tea cultivation at the present time, has been estimated at about 20,000,000 lbs., and the quantity exported is rapidly increasing. The foundation of this industry was laid between 1856 and 1859. Coffee is indigenous and is also cultivated.

Assam is rich in mineral produce. Iron, limestone and coal abound in all the hilly tracts. Petroleum springs have also been discovered, and gold has been found in many of the streams.

The common manufactures of the province are silk-thread, silk fabrics, coarse cloth, brass utensils, ivory ornaments and ordinary agricultural implements. Sylhet is noted for its ivory mats and fans and shell bracelets. There is no lack of materials, but skilled labor and industrial energy are both deficient.

In connection with Assam, the annual fairs, held both on political and commercial grounds, claim some mention here and are briefly described.

1. The Udalguri fair, held in the Mangaldai sub-division of district Darrang, about 10 miles from the foot of the hills.

This fair takes place commonly in February or March of each year, and lasts about two months. The articles brought down from the hills are:—Ponies, sheep, dogs, salt, gold, blankets, yak's tails, musk, chillies, spices, wax, honey, madder, oranges and walnuts.

2. The Kerkaria Fair, held in February and March, and established by the Raja of Kerkaria in Bhutan, at a place on the Sukmi river, just beyond the border of the Darrang district, and about 15 miles north-west of Udalguri.

3. The Daimara Fair, held about the month of February, at a place three miles beyond the British frontier, and distant about 25 miles in a straight line north-east of Udalguri.

4. The Sadiya Fair, held at Sadiya in January and February of each year. The imports at this fair are :—Rubber, wax, musk, cloths, mats, dhaos and ivory. The exports are English and Assamese cloths, salt, brass-ware, bell-metal utensils, silver earrings, beads, brass-wire and opium. Sadiya promises to become ultimately a place of considerable importance, as it must be the starting point of the as yet unknown route between Assam and China.

The neighbouring hill tribes resort in considerable number to these fairs, and a large amount of trade is effected.

At Silchar too a fair is held in the months of December and January, which is largely attended by pony and cattle dealers from Manipur.

Form of Administration.

The administration of the Province is carried on under the Non-Regulation system, and is entrusted to a Chief Commissioner, acting immediately under the orders of the Supreme Government. The constitution of the Chief Commissionership was effected under a proclamation, dated the 7th February 1874, the district of Sylhet being added to the Province from Bengal, by a proclamation dated the 12th September 1874. The Chief Commissioner has ordinarily the powers of a local Government, and exercises complete control over all departments and branches of the administration. The immediate and responsible representative of the authority of Government in each district is the Deputy Commissioner, who is assisted by Assistant and Extra Assistant Commissioners, to whom is allotted such parts of his duties as they are empowered to perform. In the Naga Hills district the Chief Executive Officer is called "Political Officer" in charge of the Naga Hills.

Recently a Commissioner has been appointed for the eight valley districts of this province, who is also a sessions Judge, and the channel of communication between the District Officers and the Chief Commissioner, and to whom the Deputy Commissioners of the valley districts are in certain matters subordinate.

Census.

The last Census of 1872 showed a total population of 4,129,972, but it was not fully taken in the Naga Hills and in the outlying parts of Lakhimpur, while no census was even attempted in the Garo Hills, the figures given being merely estimated.

Excluding Sylhet and Cachar, the average number of persons per square mile for the remainder of the entire province is 63. In calculating the Christian population, the Native Christians in the Khasi and Jaintia Hills have not been taken into account.

Considering its small population, Assam presents greater varieties of race than any other province. The sexes are pretty equally divided.

The tribes bordering on the Province are the following :—

Notes on the above States.

The total area of the 15 Feudatory States of the Central Provinces has been estimated at 28,835 square miles, their population about 1,053,836 souls, and revenue about Rupees 577,410 or £s. 57,741. These chiefs are almost uncontrolled in the administration of their territories; so long as they maintain order, and rule their people without oppressing them, no interference in their affairs is exercised by the British Government. Only in the matter of criminal justice are their powers circumscribed, confirmation by the Chief Commissioner in cases of severe punishment has to be obtained, and no sentence of death can be executed by any chief without the sanction of the Chief Commissioner. Each state is ruled according to its own laws and customs, and British law is not in force. The statistics for these states though taken from the latest returns available, are sometimes of course only an approximation to the truth, but they serve to shew the relative importance of the states. The Feudatories have no military forces worth naming.

The Zamindars (see next page) are mostly the representatives of families founded by soldiers of fortune, or younger sons of members of the ruling families: they pay a fixed revenue demand to the British Government. Borasambar and Phuljhar formerly belonged to the cluster of states known as the 18 Garjhats, but they are now classed among the ordinary Zamindaris and are attached to the Sambalpur district Their area, population and revenue are not included in the totals given above.

BRIEF GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

Area, Position, Boundaries, &c.

The Central Provinces occupy a vast tract of country in the centre of the Peninsula of India; they lie between the 18th and 25th degrees of North Latitude and 76th and 86th degrees of East Lontitude, and stretch from Bundelkhand in the north, to the Madras Presidency in the south, and from the frontier of Bengal in the east, to independent Malwa and to the Deccan in the west. The extreme breadth from north to south is about 500 miles, and length from east to west about 600 miles. The area of the whole tract so named is 113,043 square miles, of which 84,208 square miles are British territory, and the remainder, 28,835 square miles, the territory of Feudatory Native Chiefs. They are bounded on the north by the independent native state of Rewah and states of Bundelkhand of the Central India Agency; on the west and north-west by the British district of Lalitpur of the North-Western Provinces, by Bhopal and Indore native states of the Central India Agency, the British district of Khandesh in the Bombay Presidency and by Berar, or the Hyderabad Assigned Districts; on the south and south-east by the Nizam's dominions, the Jeypur native state and the Ganjam district of the Madras Presidency; on the east and north east by the tributary states of Orissa and the Garhjat states of Chota Nagpore in the Bengal jurisdiction. The Central Provinces are therefore enclosed on nearly every side by foreign territory, and are thus cut off geographically from other purely British provinces.

Topography, &c.

Geographically the Provinces are divided into two parts by the Satpura range of mountains that runs south of the Nerbudda river from east to west. This range embraces within itself considerable tracts of table land. Commencing at the lofty plateau of Amarkantak, the range extends westwards as far as the western coast. From Amarkantak an outer ridge runs south-west for about 100 miles to a part known as the Salitekri Hills, thus forming as it were the head of the range, which, narrowing as it proceeds westwards, changes from a broad table land to two parallel ridges bounding on either side the valley of the Tapti, ending so far as these provinces are concerned, at the famous hill fortress of Asirgarh. Beyond this point the Rajpipla Hills, which separate the valley of the Nerbudda from that of the Tapti, complete the chain as far as the Western Ghats. The mean elevation of the range is about 2,500 feet, but many of the peaks and some of the plateaux have an elevation of more than 3,500 feet above the sea. The plateaux of Amarkantak and Chauradadar in the Mandla district rise to a height of nearly 3,500 feet; the height of the hill of Khamla in the Betul district is 3,700 feet, and the general height of the Chikalda hills overlooking the Berar plain, is 3,700 feet, while the Pachmarhi hills, east of Betul, rise abruptly from the Nerbudda valley and culminate at Dhupgarh, at an elevation of 4,500 feet. East of Asirgarh there is a break in the range through which the railway from Bombay to Allahabad passes, as well as the road to Central India, and at which the elevation is not more than 1,240 feet above the sea. West of Asirgarh the range is continued to the Western Ghats by a belt of mountainous country 40 to 50 miles in breadth with an average height of about 2,000 feet above the sea, some peaks however rising up to 3,000 and 4,000 feet. The whole length of the Satpura range is scarcely less than 600 miles, while its breadth at the head across Balaghat and Mandla is about 100 miles. On the table lands of this range, east of Asirgarh, lie the districts of Betul, Chhindwara, Seoni, Balaghat and Mandla.

North of the Satpura range, offshoots of low hills stretch northwards and approach the Khaimur Hills, which with the Bhanrer Hills (both branches of the Vindhyan range), form the eastern scarp of the plateau on which lie the districts of Damoh and Saugor; these ranges attain a height of 2,500 feet.

Eastwards from Amarkantak to within a few miles of the eastern coast of the Peninsula of India, stretch a succession of ranges of hills, offshoots of the Vindhyan chain, separating the plain of Sambalpur from Chota Nagpore.

To the south the provinces are shut in by the wide mountainous tract of Bastar, stretching from the Bay of Bengal to the Godavari river, and extending from the west of that river up to the rocky ridges and plateau of Khandesh, and enclosing the plain of Berar along its southern border.

The plain country of the province may be said to lie in two great divisions to the north and south of the great central range of mountains. North of the Satpuras we have the rich valley of the Nerbudda, extending from the Jubbulpore to the Hoshangabad and Nimar districts, a distance of nearly 350 miles; the elevation of this valley falls from 1,400 feet at Jubbulpore to 1,120 feet at Hoshangabad. In breadth it is about 30 miles. This great plain is most fertile and is cultivated with wheat, cotton and sugar-cane. South of the Satpuras and the ranges that run eastwards, we have the plain of Sambalpur with all its Native states and Zamindaris extending over an area of some 23,000 square miles, and which may be considered the central basin of the Mahanadi. Separated from Sambalpur by ranges running southward from the great central chain, lies the plain of Chhattisgarh, having a mean elevation of 1,000 feet and an area of about 22,000 square miles, and forming the upper basin of the Mahanadi. Further to the west, and again divided off by hills, is the great plain of Nagpur, extending over some 21,000 square miles. The general surface of this last plain inclines towards the south, from 1,000 feet above the sea at Nagpur, to 750 feet at Chanda, the eastern portion being drained by the Wainganga, the western by the Wardha.

The principal rivers which with their tributaries drain this wide region are: the Nerbudda, which, rising in the high table land of Amarkantak, and pursuing a direct westerly course for 500 miles to the Gulf of Cambay, receives the whole drainage of the northern slopes of the Satpuras; this river is almost everywhere fordable in the hot season; the Mahanadi, rising in the wild mountains of Bastar that close in the Chhattisgarh plain to the south; the Wainganga rising in the Seoni plateau, and draining the southern slopes of the Satpuras west of Mandla, and also the greater part of the Nagpur plain; the length of this river from its source to its junction with the Wardha is about 350 miles; the Wardha rising in the Satpuras between Nagpur and Betul, and separating the districts of Nagpur, Wardha, and Chanda from Berar and the Nizam's dominions. These four great rivers are navigable for long distances during the rains, and they flow in deep beds many feet below the level of the countries which they drain.

Generally, the Central Provinces may be said to be a mountainous country, in which hill and plain, plateau and valley alternate with each other. The slopes on both sides of the great central ranges are covered with dense forest, but in the other parts of the provinces the absence of this forms a characteristic feature of the scenery.

Several lines of railway run through the Central Provinces. The Great Indian Peninsula Railway, main line, enters the territory at Burhanpur, in the district of Nimar, terminating at Jubbulpore, where it connects with the "Jubbulpore Extension" of the East Indian Railway, which enters the provinces at Undarra station; the Nagpur branch of the Great Indian Peninsula line, branches off from it at Bhosawal, and after traversing Berar, reaches Nagpur, after throwing off a branch line at Wardha station to Warora, viâ Hinganghat, a length of 45 miles, called the "Wardha Valley State Railway." The Holkar State Railway to Mhow and Indore, branches off from Khandwa station of the Great Indian Peninsula line, while a small branch from the Gadarwara station of the same line connects the town of Mopani. The extension from Nagpur to Kaliani, a distance of 125 miles, called the "Nagpur and Chhattisgarh State Railway" is now under construction and progressing rapidly.

Climate and Sanataria.

A hilly country, such as has been described, lying within the tropics and at a considerable distance from the sea, would naturally have a hot and dry climate. The temperature is to some extent, however, modified by the general elevation of the country. The south-west monsoon, which prevails from the end of June to the beginning of September, usually brings with it an abundant rainfall, and the wide tracts of forest that cover a part of the area of the provinces, retard evaporation. But notwithstanding these modifying influences, the marked characteristics of the climate for nine months of the year, are a high temperature and a low degree of humidity. The districts above the Satpuras have a temperature more nearly approaching that of the North-Western Provinces, while the Satpura plateau districts, have, from their superior elevation, a somewhat cooler climate. The hot season begins in April and lasts to the middle of June, the wet season then sets in and continues till the middle of October, while the cold season lasts from the middle of October to March inclusive. During the hot weather the heat at noon averages 100° Far. In the cold season the mean temperature is 40°. The mean annual rainfall of the Central Provinces is 45 inches, of which 41 inches fall during the monsoon or wet season, from June to October. The arrival of the monsoon occurs with great uniformity over the whole country, usually about the middle of June. The north-easterly and easterly winds set in in October and continue steadily in this direction through November and part of December, when they slacken, but continue blowing until the beginning of February: in February and March, the wind is variable but southerly winds are most frequent; the north-west wind continues from April till June, when, the monsoon setting in, the general direction is west and south-west. Pachmarhi, situated in the Hoshangabad district, is the Sanitarium of the Central Provinces.

Staples and Manufactures.

The ordinary natural productions are cotton of the finest quality, rice, wheat, maize, millet, oil seeds, opium, sugar-cane, safflower and indigo. The cotton country of the Central Provinces lies on the left bank of the Wardha river, on which bank the well-known cotton mart of Hinganghat is situated. Lac abounds in the forests, which swarm with wild animals of the kinds found elsewhere in India. The mineral resources include iron ore, coal, marble and building stone, gold and diamonds. The forests contain valuable timber trees and plants yielding drugs, resins, gums, and dyes.

There are no manufactures peculiar to the Central Provinces except perhaps the tissue work of Burhanpur, and the richly embroidered wearing apparel manufactured in parts of Nagpur and Bhandara. The ordinary manufactures are weaving, iron smelting and shaping the same into agricultural implements.

Form of Administration.

The administration of the Central Provinces is carried on under the non-regulation system, by a Chief Commissioner in direct subordination to the Government of India, the Government resolution constituting the Chief Commissionership being dated 2nd November 1861. The Chief Commissioner has ordinarily the powers of a local Government, and exercises complete control over all departments and branches of the administration, the courts, Civil and Criminal, being separately controlled by a Chief Judge under the name of Judicial Commissioner. For administrative purposes the Central Provinces are divided into four divisions, each controlled by a Commissioner, and subordinate to Commissioners are 19 Deputy Commissioners, each holding executive chargé of a district. In every district there are two or more subdivisions, the direct management of each being entrusted to a native Sub-collector called a Tahsildar. There are 50 such subdivisions in the 19 districts of the Central Provinces.

Census.

A general census of the population of the Central Provinces was taken on the 25th January 1872. This was the second regular census, the first having been taken in November 1866. The total area being 113,043 square miles, and including the Feudatory States, the population according to the new census, 10,304,070, the number of persons per square mile is 90·5. If, however, the Khalsa or British Territory be separated from the Feudatory states, the figures are :—

	Area.	Population.	Density.
Khalsa ...	84,208 square miles	9,251,234	109 per square mile.
Feudatory States	28,835 „ „	1,052,836	36 „ „

The entire population in 1866 was 9,104,511 souls. The recent census gives an increase of 1,198,559, or of 2·04 per cent. in five years. The sexes are nearly equally divided.

The census of 1872 was in every respect more detailed and complete than the enumeration of 1866, and is sufficiently accurate for all statistical purposes. The population of these provinces is classified as follows :—10,487 Christians, 240,965 Mahomedans, 6,518,137 Hindus, 36,651 Parsis, Buddhists and Jains, 2,444,994 Aborigines, and others.

BRIEF GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

Area, Position, Boundaries, &c.

The Province of British Burmah extends along the eastern shore of the Bay of Bengal, and lies between the parallels of 22° 0′ and 10° 0′ North, and longitudes 92° 10′ and 99° 30′ East, the extreme length of this stretch of country being about 1,000 miles, and the total area 87,456 square miles, of which about 4,000 only are cultivated. It is bounded on the south and west by the Bay of Bengal, and a part of the Chittagong district of Bengal, and on the north and east by the independent kingdoms of Burmah and Siam.

The province is composed of the tracts of Arakan, Tenasserim and Pegu. Arakan and Tenasserim were ceded to the British Government after the first Burmese war of 1825-26, while Pegu was not annexed to the British dominions until after the second Burmese war of 1852.

The portion known as the Kareng Hill Tracts, is a division of the Toungngoo district; it was formed in 1876, and lies to the eastward of the Sittoung river.

Topography, &c.,

The British Burmah Province is geographically divided into four portions, viz:— [1] Arakan, stretching from the Naaf estuary, (which separates the province from Chittagong), to Cape Negrais; [2] The Valleys of the Irrawaddy and Sittoung rivers, separated from Arakan on the west, by the Arakan Yoma range of hills, and from each other by the Pegu Yoma range; [3] The Valley of the Salween; and [4] Tenasserim, which last is a narrow strip like Arakan reaching down to the Pakchan stream, and separated from Siam by a lofty chain of hills running north and south, nearly parallel to the coast, and about thirty or forty miles inland, but approaching nearer to the sea at its southern extremity. A large portion of British Burmah consists of mountainous tracts, almost wholly uninhabited, and of impenetrable jungle.

The Arakan portion, from the Naaf estuary to cape Negrais, is bounded on the north and east, by the high chain of mountains extending in a southerly direction from the south-eastern extremities of Sylhet and Cachar, and gradually diminishing till it ends fifteen or sixteen miles south-east of the rocky promontory of cape Negrais at Pagoda point. This chain, though of considerable height to the north, diminishes in altitude as it reaches Arakan, none of the passes across it, in that portion of its length, being more than 4,000 feet above the sea, the Ayeng pass into the valley of the Irrawaddy is much less. From the Naaf estuary to Kyouk-phyoo harbour, the coast is a labyrinth of creeks and tidal nullahs, and from this point to cape Negrais, it is rugged and rocky, offering few harbours for ships. This coast is studded with fertile islands, the largest of which are Cheduba, Shahpuri and Ramree.

Owing to the nearness to the coast of the range which bounds Arakan, there are no large rivers, the principal ones are, the Naaf estuary about thirty miles in length and three miles broad at its mouth, shallowing considerably towards the head; the Neroo river, an arm of the sea extending more than fifty miles inland, and from three to four miles broad at its mouth; the Koladyne or Arakan river rising in the Lushai Hills, and navigable for forty miles by vessels of three to four hundred tons burden, and on the right bank of which, close to its mouth, is situated the town of Akyab, the head quarters of the district of that name and of the Arakan Division. The approach to Akyab is dangerous and difficult, the channel being narrow, and with only 3½ fathoms of water over the bar at low water. The other rivers are the Talak, the Ayeng, the Sandoway, the Toungngoo and the Gwa, the last named being a good haven for steamers or vessels of from nine to ten feet draught. The soil throughout Arakan is alluvial, mixed in places with sand; the islands are of volcanic formation, and though rocky, are fertile.

The Valleys of the Irrawaddy, Sittoung and Salween rivers are British territory only in their lower portions, the two first named unite and form an extensive plain stretching from cape Negrais on the west, to Martaban on the east. The water-shed between these two streams is the Pegu Yoma range, terminating in low hills at Rangoon. The Poungloung range, rising to a height of 7,000 feet, bounds these valleys on the east. The northern boundary line separating the British possessions from the territory of the King of Burmah, leaves the Arakan hills at a point called the "ever visible peak," and running due east, passes the river Irrawaddy at its 50th mile, and the Pegu Yoma range, forty-three miles further on, thence, after thirty-three miles, it crosses the Sittoung river, finally losing itself in a desert of mountains thirteen or fourteen miles further east. The plains portion of these two valleys is highly cultivated and the richest part of the whole province. Owing to the spurs thrown out by the Pegu Yoma range, the main valleys are divided into several smaller ones. A strip of country in the Sittoung valley on the west, about twenty-five or thirty miles broad, is covered with dense jungle, which stretches down as far south as Shwegyeng. The coast line from cape Negrais to the gulf of Martaban is low and flat.

The main rivers in this portion of the Province are the Irrawaddy, flowing from the frontier line for 240 miles to the sea, and the Sittoung, rising far north of British territory, which it enters just above Toungngoo. As the Irrawaddy nears the coast it divides, converting the lower portion of its valley into a net-work of tidal creeks; its first branch, being sent off to the westward a little above Henzadah, flows past Bassein and enters the Bay of Bengal by two main mouths. This branch is navigable by large ships for eighty miles, or as far as to Bassein, a port of some importance. After passing Henzada another branch flows off to the eastward, joining the Hleing river just above Rangoon. The main river then divides and sub-divides till it empties itself into the sea by no less than ten mouths. The waters of the Irrawaddy commence to rise in March and continue to rise till September, (flooding the surrounding lowlands), when they begin to fall. The Irrawaddy is navigable for river steamers as far as to Bhamo, 600 miles beyond the British frontier. The velocity of its waters, when the river is full, is five miles an hour. The Sittoung is narrow up to Shwegyeng, below this place it widens, at first gradually then very rapidly, and at last flows into the gulf of Martaban. A bore, with a curling crest nine-feet high, sweeps up the Sittoung river, its effects being felt at Shwegyeng. The other rivers are the Hleing, rising close to Prome, and navigable for vessels of the largest size to some little distance above Rangoon; the Pegu and the Poozoondoung rivers, rising in the Yoma range, about fifty-eight miles above the town of Pegu; the Beeling, rising in the Poungloung hills, and entering the gulf between the Salween and the Sittoung; the Salween, at the mouth of which stands the town of Maulmain; the Attaran rising in the chain of hills that form the boundary between the kingdom of Siam and British Burmah; and the Gyne which is navigable for about one hundred and eighty miles for small boats. The Salween, though a large river is not navigable owing to its rapids.

The Yoma ranges are composed mainly of brown or grey-slate clay, alternating with beds of sand-stone, assuming at times a basaltic character.

The southern portion of this Province called Tenasserim, which includes the Moscos and the Mergui Archipelago, lies along the coast between 17° and 10° north latitude, and is bounded on the east, from thirty to forty miles inland, by a chain of hills in some places 5,000 feet in height. The breadth of this chain at Martaban has never been ascertained, but near Tavoy it appears to be about forty miles wide, whence it gradually narrows to ten miles near Mergui. The coast line is very irregular and low for some miles inland, beyond which the surface of the country is mountainous, thinly populated and much intersected by streams. The chief rivers are the Tavoy and Tenasserim. The Tenasserim, named after the town, rises in about 15° north latitude and flows through a valley scarcely broader than its bed; it is navigable for about 100 miles. The mouth of the Tavoy river affords excellent anchorage for ships, and vessels can anchor along the coast at all times during the north-east monsoon. The soil of the northern portion of Tenasserim is alluvial. Stratified sand-stone is the prevailing rock interspersed with veins of quartz, in which crystals of great beauty are sometimes discovered. The chief formation of the small hills is laterite.

The communications throughout the province are mainly by water. A State Railway, 163 miles in length, runs from Rangoon to Prome, called the 'Rangoon and Irrawaddy Valley' line, and steamers ply on the Irrawaddy between Thayetmyo, Prome, Myanoung, Henzada and Rangoon. There is steam communication from Calcutta viâ Chittagong and Akyab to the southern stations of Arakan, and to Rangoon and Maulmain, also south to Tavoy and Mergui. A navigable canal connects the Pegu and Sittoung rivers, and a complete project for the 'Rangoon and Sittoung Valley' State Railway, to attract the whole of the trade with Karengnee and the Shan states, has been submitted for sanction. The whole of the Salween Hill Tracts is a wilderness of mountains, and it is through these hills that Shan Caravans come down annually to Rangoon and Maulmain, and except the routes used by them, there are no roads over which laden animals can pass.

There are four large lakes or more properly lagoons, which deserve mention, viz., the Moo lake in the Henzada district, two and a half miles across; the Lahgyin; the Kandangyee, or "Royal Lake" near Rangoon, and the clear water lake in the Bassein district.

Climate and Sanataria.

The climate of Burmah, though moist and depressing for a part of the year, is cooler than India. In some of the forest tracts, during the monsoons, it is deadly, but on the coast, and on the frontier, it is by no means unhealthy, and is much better adapted to the European constitution than any part of India. The registration returns show, that the deaths of children under five years of age, are in the proportion of 27·85 of the total death-rates, the percentage of children under 12 years of age being 35·8 of the whole population. In its pluvial character this province is most characteristic and remarkable. The rainfall varies considerably, from 218 inches at Sandoway to 50 inches at Thayetmyo, the wet-season lasting from May to October, during which time the rains are almost constant. November, December, January and February are the cold months, while the hot weather lasts from February till the rains commence again. The average temperature is greatly affected by the sea breeze. The thermometer ranges from 65° in winter to 90° in summer.

There are no sanataria in Burmah; many proposals have been made to found them on the high mountain ranges, but, however pleasant they would be in summer, "they would have to be abandoned in the rains, for not even natives could remain to take care of the buildings; so incredibly rapid and luxurious is the vegetation, that the very next year a forest would have to be cleared away to find the houses again."

Staples and Manufactures.

The industry of British Burmah is almost exclusively devoted to agriculture. About 86 per cent. of the whole area of the province is devoted to rice, and only about 3 per cent. of the acreage to cotton, tobacco, sugar-cane, pepper, indigo and other produce, the cold weather crops of India being almost unknown here. The whole province is well adapted for a much more systematic and extensive production of many staples than the Burmese will ever take into consideration. Tobacco growing in northern Arakan is attracting notice. According to native calculations the average production of tobacco in Arakan is 370lbs. an acre, but experience has shown that the yield of properly cultivated ground would be 800lbs. an acre. The tobacco producing soil is so rich that no rotation of crops is necessary, and beyond a little weeding, the plantations require only occasional manual labor. The crop is sown in November and reaped in April. The largest tobacco growing district in Burmah is Thayetmyo. Experiments have also been made in tea and coffee planting, but with little result, for although in many parts of the province the soil and climate are no doubt favorable, the difficulty of procuring the labor that would be required for these commercial staples has hitherto proved insuperable. Tea of very good quality grown in Arakan, is said to be worth about 3*s.* a lb. in the London market. The principal manufacturing industries are rice cleaning, timber sawing, silk and cotton weaving, boat building, and the manufacture of salt and gnapee, a preparation of fish. Other manufactures are comparatively insignificant, though in some respects interesting, and in many instances by no means devoid of artistic merit. Cutch, used for dyeing purposes, is almost the only article manufactured for export. At Rangoon, Maulmain, Akyab and Bassein, there are numerous steam rice mills and saw mills for cleaning rice and sawing timber for export.

The metalliferous minerals of the province are confined principally to the Mergui and Tavoy districts of the Tenasserim Division, where lead, iron, copper and antimony are met with, as well as gold dust in the Shwegyeng river. Petroleum is met with to some extent in the Akyab and Kyouk-phyoo districts, and limestone in Kyouk-phyoo, Bassein, Amherst and Thayetmyo districts. Coal of inferior quality is found up the Tenasserim river in Mergui, and in the Thayetmyo district.

No emigration takes place from British Burmah, but there is considerable immigration. Shans from the Burmese and Chinese Shan states, and other laborers from Upper Burmah, come down in large numbers, by whole villages at a time, during the harvest season, after which they return, some few settling permanently. Laborers also come over in considerable numbers from Madras, Chittagong and Akyab to the southern part during the rice shipping season, but few remain after it is over.

Form of Administration.

The three divisions comprising the province of British Burmah, viz., Arakan, Pegu and Tenasserim, from the time of their coming under British rule up to January 1862, were governed separately by their respective commissioners, under the control of the Supreme Government in the case of Pegu and Tenasserim, and under that of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal in the case of Arakan. In January 1862, however, these three divisions were amalgamated and formed into a Chief Commissionership (under Major-General Sir Arthur Phayre) in direct subordination to the Government of India, the Chief Commissioner having the powers of a local Government, and exercising, as in the Central Provinces, complete control over all departments and branches of the administration, the courts being controlled by a Chief Judge named the Judicial Commissioner, appointed in January 1872.

For administrative purposes this province is divided into three divisions, each controlled by a Commissioner subordinate to the Chief; subordinate to the Commissioners are sixteen Deputy Commissioners, each holding executive and judicial charge of a district, under whom are numerous other officials, both executive and judicial, in charge of the one hundred and fourteen sub-divisions into which the several districts have been divided. There are 18 sub-divisions in the four districts of the Arakan Division, 55 in the six districts of the Pegu Division, and 41 in the six districts of the Tenasserim Division.

Census.

A census was taken of the province of British Burmah on the 15th August 1872, and by it the population was computed to be 2,747,148 souls, or males 1,435,518, females 1,311,630, the former exceeding the latter by 123,888, this disproportion being due to the fact, that most of the Hindoo males are aliens, who are only temporary residents and have not their families with them. According to a census taken for revenue purposes in 1876, the total population of British Burmah was computed to be, 2,942,605 souls. In the Administration Report for 1877-78, the population is given as 3,011,614, as shown in statement given at page 10.

BRIEF GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

Berar, Eastern and Western, known as the Hyderabad Assigned Districts, forms the northernmost portion of the Hyderabad native state. This tract was assigned to the British Government, under the treaties of 1853 and 1861, in pledge for debts incurred by a former Nizam, during the early struggles for the sovereignty of the Deccan on the dissolution of the Mogal empire, and for the maintenance of the military force termed the Hyderabad or the Nizam's Contingent, raised in lieu of the troops which the Nizam had been previously bound to furnish on demand in time of war. This assigned portion is situated between longitudes 76° 0′ and 79° 15′ East, and latitudes 19° 30′ and 21° 45′ North, and is about 150 miles in length from north-west to south-east, and about 144 miles in breadth from north to south, with an area of 17,711 square miles, and a population of 2,227,654 souls, giving an average of 126 persons per square mile for the whole tract. Berar is bounded on the north and east by the districts of Nimar, Betul, Nagpur and Wardha of the Central Provinces, and on the south and west by the remainder of the Nizam's Dominions known as Hyderabad, and the district of Khandesh of the Bombay Presidency. Although entirely under British administration, the nominal sovereignty of the country is still retained by the Nizam.

The Ajanta range of hills intersects the whole province from west to east, and its steep ridge divides the interior geography of Berar into two systems. Setting aside the Melghat or Gangra mountain tract, of the Gawilgurh hills, as abnormal, we have two distinct sections of Berar, the Payanghat or lowland country, with an average height of 1,000 feet, bounded on the north by the Gawilgurh hills, and on the south by the outer scarps of the Ajanta range; and the Balaghat, or upland country above the Ajanta ridge, sloping down southward beyond the ghats or passes which lead up to it. The mass of the Gawilgurh hills or Melghat mountain tract, which may be said to wall in Berar on the north, attains elevations varying from 2,000 to upwards of 4,000 feet, the highest summit, Bairat, being 4,200 feet. It forms the outermost southern barrier of the Satpura range, and rises abruptly from the plain of Berar or the Payanghat. On these hills the plateau of Chikalda, the sanitarium of Berar, is situated. It is distant 20 miles from Ellichpur.

The principal rivers of Berar are the Tapti for a short section of its course, the Wardha skirting its eastern boundary, the Penganga skirting very nearly the whole of its southern boundary, and the Purna. There is but one lake in the whole province, the remarkable salt water lake of Lonar, situated on the most southerly plateau of the Buldana district. This lake presents the appearance of an enormous crater of an extinct volcano, and deserves mention as being one of the most prominent, curious and interesting physical features of Berar.

The population of this province is dense, its rainfall regular and copious, and its area almost entirely cultivated, the whole of the plain surface being covered over at harvest time by a sheet of crops. It possesses one of the richest and most extensive cotton fields in India, and several cotton marts of the very first calibre, and in respect to natural and material advantages it surpasses any tract in the Central Provinces. A group of beds of thick coal of fair quality has lately been found in the Wun district, and iron ore is very plentiful throughout large tracts on the eastern side, especially in the hills about Karinja, and among the low ranges close to Amraoti on the north-east.

The Resident at the court of Hyderabad stands in the position of Chief Commissioner of Berar, and is the head of the local administration, directly subordinate to the Government of India. For administrative purposes, Berar is divided into two divisions, each controlled by a Commissioner. Subordinate to Commissioners are six Deputy Commissioners, each holding executive charge of a district, under whom are fifteen Assistant Commissioners, and eight Extra Assistant Commissioners, in executive charge of the twenty-two Sub-Divisions of the six districts, the average area of each Sub-Division being about 810 square miles.

The last census of Berar was taken in November 1867; the proportion of males to females is equal, and Mahomedans constitute only seven per cent. of the whole population, which is classified as follows:—Christians 841; Hindus 1,883,242; Mahomedans 168,283; Parsis, Buddhists and Jains 6,604; Aborigines 168,684. Total for the whole Province 2,227,654.

Hyderabad (The Nizam's Territory) or The Deccán.

The Nizam's Dominions, called also Hyderabad Native State, from the name of its capital, is the same as the Subhat of the Deccan of Mogal times, and forms by far the largest and most important of the protected native states of India. This territory occupies the central portion of the table land of the Deccan, a term which in its limited sense implies the tract of country in Southern India, situated between the Nerbudda and Kistna rivers, and supported by the Eastern and Western Ghats. Hyderabad is situated between latitudes 15° 10′ and 21° 45′ North, and longitudes 74° 40′ and 81° 32′ East. It is about 475 miles in length from south-west to north-east and about the same distance in breadth. The area is estimated at nearly 98,000 square miles, with a population of about 11 millions, giving an average of 112 souls to the square mile. The territory is bounded on the north and east by Berar and the Central Provinces, on the south by the territory subject to the Presidency of Madras, and on the west by the territory subject to the Presidency of Bombay, and is traversed and skirted by the river Godavari with its tributaries the Purna and Manjira; by the Pranhita with its tributaries the Wardha and Penganga; and by the Kistna with its tributaries the Bhima and Tungabhadra, all flowing from the Western Ghats eastwards into the Bay of Bengal. The whole territory is an elevated table land, in some parts rising to upwards of 2,500 feet above sea level, and is to a large extent covered with low brushwood and uncultivated, but where irrigated and cultivated the soil is fertile and produces large crops of cotton, wheat, the pulses, rice, and oil seeds, and date and palm trees are common everywhere.

The capital of the state stands on the southern or right bank of the river Musi, which flows between it and the Residency, and is fordable except when swollen by the rains. It is about a mile distant from the Residency, and five miles by the road from the cantonment of Secundrabad. The population of the city and suburbs has been estimated at about 400,000.

The revenue of this state is about £ 4,000,000 per annum, and the Nizam's forces number 720 guns and about 30,000 men, of whom upwards of 6,000 are Arabs, and there are altogether about 10,000 foreign mercenaries besides in his territory. The only feudatory of the Nizam is the Raja of Gudwal, who is not interfered with so long as he pays Rs. 1,15,000 a year into the Nizam's treasury.

The climate of Hyderabad is on the whole pleasant and healthy during a greater part of the year, the temperature is moderate, and is described as a delightful medium between the extremes of heat and cold experienced in the northern parts of India. In the cold season the thermometer stands at 74° rising to 91° in the hot months, of which April and May are the most trying. The average rainfall is very small, not exceeding 32 inches for the whole country.

The Railway from Madras to Bombay runs through a portion of this state, a branch called the Nizam's State Railway, 121 miles in length, striking off from Wadi station, to Hyderabad the capital, while the Great Indian Peninsula Railway from Bombay to Nagpur, traverses the whole length of Berar, from west to east.

The Government of the native state of Hyderabad, or the Nizam's Dominions, is modelled after that of Madras. Each district or Sircar has its first, second, and third Talukdar, corresponding to Collector, Sub-Collector and Assistant Collector. Three districts united, form a division under a Suddar Talukdar or Head Collector. The rural chiefs who are distributed throughout the interior of the country under the names of Deshmukhs, Despandias, Zamindars and Mannewars, are associated in divers forms and degrees with the Revenue and Police administrations of their native districts.

The district of Ajmere-Merwara lies in the centre of Rajputana, surrounded on all sides by the territories of native chiefs, and consists geographically of two distinct tracts, which were up till recently two separate districts. The Ajmere portion lies between 25° 41′ and 26° 41′ North Latitude, and 74° 17′ and 75° 23′ East Longitude. The tract called Merwara, from the peculiar race of Mers who inhabit it, is a narrow strip of hill country about 100 miles in length and 5 to 20 miles broad, lying between 25° 23′ and 26° 11′ North Latitude, and 73° 47′ and 74° 30′ East Longitude. The population in the open country of Ajmere is mainly agricultural, the prevailing classes being Jats, Rajputs and Gujars, numbering 30,486, 14,558 and 29,345 respectively.

The plateau on which stands the town of Ajmere, one of the most picturesque in India, is perhaps the highest elevation of the plains of Hindustan, and the fort of Taragarh, which overlooks the town, is more than 1,300 feet above the plateau. The town lies surrounded by low hills on the edge of a great artificial lake, and contains the tomb of a renowned Mussalman saint. The controlling authority in the united districts is vested in a Commissioner assisted by two Assistant Commissioners, the Commissioner being also Agent to the Governor General for the States of Rajputana.

Notes on the above States.

Of the above twenty Native States of the Rajputana Agency, all except Shahpura and Lawa, belong to the first rank in the empire, being under treaty with the Imperial Government. Fifteen of them are still ruled by the chiefs of Rajput clans or families. Bhurtpore and Dholpur belong to Jat families, and Tonk to a Mahomedan dynasty. Shahpura, which has no treaty with the empire, differs from the others both as to its origin as well as to the nature of its political connections. The ancestor of this state received a grant of lands belonging to Meywar. Those lands one of the succeeding Shahpura chiefs united with a grant of 84 villages made to him by the emperor Shah Jehan, in the imperial district of Ajmere; the whole tract now constitutes the Shahpura state, whose chief thus holds grants both from Oodeypore and the Empire. The small chief-ship of Khetri is held on a double tenure of the same kind as that of Shahpura. On the eastern border of Rajputana beyond the states of Boondee and Kotah, are seven estates called the seven Kotris, held by seven Rajput families paying tribute to Jeypore through Kotah, which state is generally responsible for them to the Imperial Government. The minor chiefships of each state pay tribute to the state's chief, and are subject to his general authority. On the western border of Rajputana is a peculiar tract called Mallani, within the territory of the Jodhpore chief, which has always claimed a sort of independence, and in which there are no very great land-holders, the whole country being parcelled out among family groups. The Shaikhawati tract in the northern districts of the Jeypore state, is in a similar condition of debateable submission to the Jeypore chief. The political condition of the Hill Tracts belonging to Meywar is rather complicated. These tracts are inhabited by Bhil tribes, some of whom are directly under the State's Government, others are under the immediate jurisdiction of the great Rajput nobles whose lands they inhabit, while a third section is under its own chiefs, who, though paying tribute to Oodeypore, are yet very independent within their own domains. These Bhil tracts stretch from Sirohee to Dungarpur.

BRIEF GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

Area, Position, Boundaries, &c.

Rajputana, so denominated from its prevailing population, the Rajputs, is a great territorial circle including the British district of Ajmere-Merwara and nineteen states, each having its own autonomy and separate chief. This territory lies between the parallels of 23° and 30° North Latitude, and 69° 30′ and 78° 15′ East Longitude. The total area is approximately estimated at 129,091 square miles. On the west Rajputana is bounded by the province of Sind in the Bombay Presidency, and on the north-west by the native state of Bahawalpur under the Punjab Government; thence all its northern and eastern frontier marches with the Punjab and the North-Western Provinces; on the south-east it is bounded by the territories of Sindhia, Holkar and other native states of the Central India Agency; and on the south-west its frontier marches with the Gujarat native states of the Bombay Presidency. Within this area, the states of Jeysulmere, Jodhpore or Marwar and Bickaneer lie in the west and north; Ulwur and the Shekhawati tract of Jeypore in the north-east; Jeypore, Bhurtpore, Dholpur, Kerowlee, Boondee, Kotah and Jhallawar are the eastern and south-eastern states; Sirohee lies in the south-west, while Partabgarh, Banswara, Dungarpur, and Oodeypore or Meywar lie in the south. In the centre lie the British district of Ajmere-Merwara, the states of Kishengarh and Shahpura and parts of Tonk.

Topography.

Rajputana is divided into two main divisions by the Aravalli range of hills which runs through it in a direction nearly north-east and south-west, about three-fifths of the territory lying north-west of this line, and two-fifths on the south-east. In order to make a general description of this great region intelligible, these divisions will be dealt with separately.

The North-West Division comprises the whole vast tract stretching from Sind on the west, and along the southern Punjab frontier, to near Delhi on the north-east. The character of this tract which radiates with a constant though very slight slope towards the Rann of Cutch and the Indus, is throughout uniformly sandy, unproductive and ill watered, though improving gradually from a mere desert in the west and north-west, to comparatively habitable and fertile lands towards the north-east and north. Immediately beyond the mountain's skirt, the soil alters from hard rock to sand mixed with very little loam, and the country, as far as the beginning of the desert proper, or up to the Loni river, consists of a succession of gentle swells clothed with rather thick, low jungle, fairly peopled and to some extent cultivated. Beyond the Loni river, and from the edges of the Rann of Cutch, stretches north-eastward through the states of Mallani, Jeysulmere, Jodhpore, and Bickaneer, the Great Desert of northern India known as the Tharr, a vast sandy plain, traversed in the interior by long waves of sand hills. The character of this desert region is the same everywhere, consisting of long straight ridges of sand hills running in parallel lines, separated by short and fairly regular intervals, and varying from 50 to 100 feet in height, sparsely clothed with stunted shrubs and tufts of coarse grass, with wells few and deep, rendering agriculture difficult, and towns and villages at long distances apart. In the north-eastern angle of Rajputana, the country is not so near a wilderness as in the extreme north and west, yet a great extent is comparatively waterless and waste. Some few parts, however, have a better soil, and in these the principal towns are well-built and fairly prosperous. The sub-montane region, lying immediately under the northern slopes of the Aravallis, varying in height from 600 to 2,000 feet, and absorbing the drainage up to the Loni river, is well cultivated, especially along the banks of the Loni, and has many substantial villages. The general level of the country in the north-west division is much lower than the country on the south-eastern side of the Aravallis.

The second great Division of Rajputana, south-east of the Aravallis, contains the higher and more fertile country. In contrast to the sandy plains, which are the uniform feature more or less modified of the north-west, this south-eastern division has a more diversified character and kindlier soil. It contains extensive hill ranges, and long stretches of rocky woodland, traversed by considerable rivers with wide vales, fertile table-lands and great breadths of excellent soil. The Meywar country occupies all the eastern flank of the range, at a level eight or nine hundred feet higher than the plains of the west, and whereas the western slopes of the Aravallis, towards the Jodhpore country, is abrupt on the eastern, on the Meywar, Kishengarh and Jeypore side, the land falls very gradually as it recedes from the long parallel ridges, spreading out into the open champaign country of the centre of Meywar, though on the south-west corner of this tract the outskirts of the main range become entangled in a confused net-work of outlying hills and valleys, covered with forest, and known as the Meywar Hill Tracts. From November to June this portion is easily traversed, but during and after the rainy season, many swamps form, and the river beds are often an impassable flood. All the south-east of Rajputana is watered by the drainage of the Vindhyas. In the extreme south-east corner, there is a long narrow strip of country called the Chaumela, and on the eastern side a remarkable plateau called the Patar, upon which lies almost all the territory of Kotah, with parts of Boondee to the north of Kotah, and of Jhallawar to the south of it. From the south this table-land is ascended by three distinct steppes or elevations out of the Malwa plain, and the line of hills which marks its eastern edge runs round by Chittore to Mandalgarh. The north-western face of this plateau is very distinctly marked by the line of the Boondee hills, which run like a wall from Mandalgarh north-west to Indargarh. Eastwards this plateau falls towards the Gwalior country, so gradually that the general aspect would not suggest a raised plateau, though the three low steppes leading up to it from the south and west, are very distinctly marked. The surface of this plateau is more or less stony with wide uplands, broad dips or levels, containing deep black culturable soil between the hills, the summits of which are rugged, irregular, barren or covered with vegetation. Between the Chambal and Parbati rivers there is a considerable tract of rich, black soil. Beyond the Patar to the north-east of the junction of the Banas and Chambal rivers, there is a very rugged region, consisting of several ranges of no great height, running parallel with the river's course, and separating the Chambal basin from the uplands. Further northward the country smooths down and opens out towards the Bhurtpore territory. In the north-east corner of the Oodeypore state, about the town of Jhazpur, and within the Boondee territory adjoining, is a rugged bit of country called the Mina Kherar. Further southward again in the south-east corner of the same state, is another stretch of hill country and jungle enclosed by the towns of Oodeypore, Dungarpur, Partabgarh and Neemuch, called the Chappan, one of the most difficult and troublesome in Central India. The Bhakar is another tract of very rugged hill country lying over against Abu, to the east of the Sirohi state, inhabited by Grassias, a half-blood tribe between Bhils and Rajputs.

Of the mountains and hill ranges, the Aravallis are by far the most important, they mark off the whole of Rajputana into two natural divisions, separating the desert plains of the north-west from the more fertile and kindlier region of the south-east. From the north-east, the first appearance of this range on a large scale is near the town of Khetri, where it attains an altitude of 2,600 feet, increasing to 3,450 feet at Ragonathgarh, its highest elevation in this direction, Harasnath in the Sikar district being 2,998 feet. At Ajmere the range begins to widen out considerably, the highest points ranging from 1,000 to 2,000 feet above the plain, the most conspicuous peak being that on which stands the fort of Taragarh, overlooking Ajmere, 2,855 feet above sea level. From Ajmere to Beawar the range is less imposing. From near Beawar south-west, for about 100 miles in the Merwara strip of hill country in the range, the peaks rise to about 2,850 feet, the average level of the valleys being about 1,800 feet. Beyond Merwara the hills widen, with peaks rising to about 4,000 feet above sea level, the culminating point rising above the village of Jargo, to the height of 4,330 feet. There is great difficulty of communication across this section of the Aravallis between Meywar and Marwar, and the only pass really practicable for wheels and general traffic is that of Dasuri. Further south, the hills decrease in height, and spread out until the chain loses its distinctive formation amid wide tracts of hilly wastes, extending southward over the whole western half of Meywar. Mount Abu belongs by position to the Aravalli range; it is a cluster of hills of which the highest peak rises to 5,653 feet. The other hill ranges of Rajputana are comparatively insignificant, they run through Bhurtpore, Boondee and Kerowlie; their greatest height nowhere exceeds 1,400 feet. The Makandarra range runs across the south-west districts of the Kotah state, from the Chambal to beyond Jhalrapatan.

Of rivers, the Chambal is by far the largest in Rajputana, flowing through the province for about one-third of its course, and forming its boundary for another third. It rises in the summits of the Vindhyas, upwards of 2,000 feet above the sea, and is about 650 miles in length. Next in importance to the Chambal is the Banas, which rises in the south-west of Meywar, collecting in its course all the drainage of that tract, and joining the Chambal a little beyond the north-east extremity of the Boondee state, after a course of about 300 miles. In the north-west division, the only river of any consequence is the Loni, rising in the Pohkhar valley near Ajmere, and after a course of 200 miles flowing into the Rann of Cutch; its waters are brackish, hence its name, meaning the salt river. North-west of the Loni, and throughout all the north-east, Rajputana is entirely destitute of streams worth mention. The minor rivers are the Sabarmati, the Mahi, the Som, the Bamni, the Parbati, the Beraich, the Kotesar and the Dhund. The Banas abounds in dangerous quicksands.

There are no natural fresh water lakes in Rajputana; the only considerable basin is the well-known salt lake at Sambhar. There are, however, large artificial lakes within Meywar, built with the object of storing water, viz., the Debar, Kankraoli, Udisagar and Pichola lakes.

The following lines of Railway run through the Province, viz., the 'Rajputana State Railway' from Palanpur to Ajmere, Jeypore and Agra, a branch line to Delhi diverging from Bandikui station. This line is open for traffic from Agra to Ajmere, as also is the branch to Delhi; from Ajmere to Palanpur it is under construction. The 'Ajmere and Neemuch State Railway,' also under construction; the 'Holkar State Railway,' from Khandwa station on the Great Indian Peninsular line to Neemuch, with a branch to Ujjain, open for traffic; and the 'Sindhia State Railway' from Agra to Gwalior viâ Dholpur, open for traffic up to the last named place.

Climate.

The climate of Rajputana as a whole may be reckoned as one of the healthiest in India, at least for its natives. The moderate rainfall, the free play of the winds over its surface, the sparse population, the absence of great cities and the plentiful supply of salt, may be some of the reasons why the inhabitants live long and thrive well. In the summer the sun's heat is much the same all over the province, and except in the high hills is great everywhere, in the north-west very great. Hot winds and dust storms are known more or less throughout. In the winter the climate of the north is much colder than in the lower districts, with hard frost and ice on the Bickaneer border, and from the great dryness of the atmosphere, the change of temperature between day and night is sudden, excessive and very trying sometimes. The rainfall is very unequally distributed throughout Rajputana. In the north-western part, i.e., in Jeysulmere, Bickaneer and the greater part of Jodhpore, the fall scarcely averages more than five inches. Dew is here for the great part of the year the substitute for rain. In the south-west the fall is much more copious, and in the south-east it is most abundant. In the south-west highlands of the Aravallis it sometimes passes 100 inches. In Meywar the country is never subjected to the extreme droughts of the north-west and west. In the central district of Ajmere and towards Jeypore, the periodical supply of rain is very variable; in fact to sum up, from the north-west to the south-east (excluding the Aravallis) there is a very gradually increasing rainfall from five to about forty-five inches. Mount Abu is the sanatarium of Rajputana.

Staples and Manufactures.

The mass of the people is occupied in agriculture. In the large towns banking and commerce flourish to a degree beyond what would have been expected from so backward a country. In the north the staple products for export are, salt, grain, wool and some cotton. In the south the great articles of export are, opium and cotton. In other parts of Rajputana various kinds of cereals, pulses and fibres are grown for native consumption. Melons grow in profusion in the sandy tracts and supply food to the inhabitants for a considerable portion of the year. The main wealth of the desert lands of Marwar and Bickaneer, however, consists of the vast herds of camels, horned cattle and sheep, which roam over the sandy wastes, and thrive admirably in this dry climate on the nutritious grass of the country. From these pasture lands vast numbers of sheep are driven annually to Bombay, and camels and horned cattle are bred in such numbers, that they supply the neighbouring provinces. The Bickaneer camel is considered the largest, swiftest and handsomest in India. There are no manufactures on any great scale. Woollen and leather goods are manufactured in the northern states, and steel weapons of a superior quality at Sirohee. Salt is extensively manufactured in Jodhpore and Jeypore from the great salt lakes of Sambhar, Didwana, Pokharan and Phalodi in Jodhpore, and Kachor-Rewassa in Shekhawati, and at the salt works of Pachbadra in Jodhpore.

Of metallic ores and minerals, cobalt, iron, lead, copper and alum abound in several parts of the Aravalli range, and in the minor ridges of Ulwur, Shekhawati, Meywar, Kotah and Jhallawar. Building and ornamental stone, limestone and slate are found in the Boondee and Ulwur hills, in the Aravalli range about Ajmere, and in Jeysulmere; the limestone of the Makrana quarries in Jodhpore, and of Jeysulmere being noted, as well as the slabstones from the quarries at Sillora in Kishengarh territory, used for purposes for which wood is employed elsewhere in India.

Census.

Except in the British district of Ajmere-Merwara, correct statistics of the population are not available for the states of Rajputana. Approximate calculations of the number of people in each state have been made, mainly upon the basis of counting the villages and obtaining a fair average of the number of people inhabiting an ordinary village, the figures thus resulting are given opposite each state.

Notes on the above States.

The principal states of the Central India Agency are, Gwalior (Sindhia), Indore (Holkar), Bhopal, Dhar, Jaora, Rutlam, Jabua, Orchha or Tehri, Panna, Rewah, Chatarpur and Barwani.

The multitude of petty states, held under the immediate guarantee of the British Government, have feudal relations with one or other of the larger states, and occasionally with more than one.

With the exception of the small outlying British Pargana of Manpur, under the Deputy Bhil Agency, the whole country is foreign territory. An area of 360 square miles was transferred in 1878 from the British district of Khandesh to Indore, the population so transferred is not known.

The following payments are made by the chiefs named for the maintenance of local corps and contingents, vis.—

By Jaora	Rs.	1,58,614	For the Malwa contingent.

BRIEF GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

The country embraced by the Central India Agency, lies within the parallels of 21° 24′ and 26° 52′ North, and meridians of 74° 0′ and 83° 0′ East, and is bounded on the north-east by the British districts of Mirzapur, Allahabad, Banda, Hamirpur, Jalaun, Etawah and Agra of the North-Western Provinces; on the north-west by the native states of Dholpur, Kerowlie, Jeypore, Kotah, Jhallawar, Tonk and Oodeypore of the Rajputana Agency; and on the south-east and south, by the British districts of Nimar, Hoshangabad Narsinghpur, Saugor, Damoh, Jubbulpore, Mandla and Bilaspur of the Central Provinces, and the Garhjat states of Chang Bakhar and Koria of Chota Nagpore in the Bengal jurisdiction. The British districts of Jhansi and Lalitpur of the North-Western Provinces divide this Agency into two main divisions, native Bundelkhand and Baghelkhand, lying on the east of the said districts, and the remainder, or Central India portion, on the west. Excluding native Bundelkhand and Baghelkhand, the area of the larger or Central India division, is about 61,700 square miles, with a population of 4,690,000 souls and a revenue of Rs. 201,23,000; within this area the states of Indore, Dewas, Rutlam, Dhar, Jabua, Ali-Rajpur and Barwani lie on the south-west; on the south-east is Bhopal lying across the Vindhya mountains and resting its southern frontier on the Nerbudda; in the centre are Rajgarh, Khilchipur, Narsinghgarh, Basoda and Karwai; and in the north are Gwalior and Datia. In the smaller or Bundelkhand division, with an area of 24,400 square miles, and a population of 3,480,000, Rewah lies on the east, Orchha or Tehri on the west, and Panna in the centre.

The Bundelkhand portion forms the eastern part of the great triangular plateau of Central India; it is inhabited by the peculiar Hindu tribes of Bundelas on the west, and Baghelas in Rewah on the east. To the west is the river Betwa and its tributary the Dhasan flowing to the Jamna, in the centre is the Ken also flowing into the Jamna, and to the east is the Soane flowing into the Ganges, with the Khaimur range,—a continuation of the Vindhyas,—rising up along its left bank. The Panna range, with deep ravines and isolated crags on its north-western face, traverses Bundelkhand, and there is a broken plateau between the Panna and Khaimur ridges watered by the Tons, a tributary of the Ganges. Here is the military station of Nagode, and below the Panna ridge is Nowgong. To the north, Bundelkhand terminates in an amphitheatre of precipices, shaping the country below into a bay bounded by sandstone cliffs, which again advance to near the Jamna at Mirzapur.

The larger or Central India division, has the great range of the Vindhyas along the whole south, abruptly overhanging the valley of the Nerbudda and presenting the appearance of a weather-beaten coast line. From its summits, varying in height from 1,500 to 2,500 feet, the northern slope to the Ganges commences, the whole region consisting of a broken but elevated country, with ranges of hills watered by the river Chambal, with its tributaries the Kali Sind and Parbatti; the Sind and the Betwa, all flowing north to the Jamna and Ganges, and descending from the high table-lands in cascades of great height.

The rivers that water Central India and Bundelkhand are: the Betwa rising in Bhopal, with a length of course of about 360 miles, and an ordinary flood discharge of 200,000 cubic feet per second; during the rains in extraordinary floods, the discharge is 500,000 cubic feet, and the surface velocity ten feet per second. It rises and falls rapidly in a few hours, is dry in the summer in the higher portion of its course, and is nowhere navigable. Its tributary, the Dhasan, has a length of course of 150 miles, with an ordinary flood discharge of 100,000 cubic feet, rising during the rains to 300,000 cubic feet per second, and drying up in the summer; the Ken or Kayan rising among the hills on the southern frontier, towards the Saugor division of the Central Provinces, at an elevation of 1,700 feet, with a length of course of 230 miles, and with numerous rapids and cataracts, some not less than 300 feet; the water of this river is unwholesome; the Chambal, with its tributaries the Kali Sind, Parbatti and others, draining the whole of Malwa and rising near the station of Mhow, amidst a cluster of summits of the Vindhya range, having the local appellation of Janapava, and, after a course of 650 miles, flowing into the Jamna; the Tons rising in the state of Maihar, with a length of course of 165 miles; the Sind, rising near Sironj in Malwa and flowing into the Jamna after a course of 260 miles; and the Soane, rising in the hills of Amarkantak and draining the Baghelkhand tract.

The northern part of the country, of moderate elevation, has a climate partaking of the torrid character of the neighbouring tracts of the North-Western Provinces and of Rajputana. In these parts the climate during the rainy season, and for a short time afterwards, is exceedingly unhealthy, fevers being then very rife in consequence of the moisture, imbibed by the superficial diluvial soil, being prevented from passing off by an impermeable substratum of sandstone. During the dry and hot seasons the climate is not unhealthy. The middle, the southern and the western parts, or those comprised within the Malwa tract, with little exception, have a mild and rather equable climate, resulting from the greater elevation of the surface. The cool season comprises the period from November to February, the hot season succeeds and continues to the middle of June, when the periodical rains set in and last to the close of September, the average fall being about fifty inches. During the rains the thermometer has a very moderate range, rarely more than from 72° to 80°, in the winter it sometimes falls three or four degrees below freezing point. During the sultry season the hot winds are comparatively mild and of short duration, though the thermometer sometimes rises to nearly 100° during the day, but the nights are for the most part cool and refreshing,

The population of the country within this Agency is of a mixed kind, comprising besides Mahrattas (the ruling order), Bundelas, Baghelas, Jats, Rajputs and Mahomedans, the last being estimated at about a twentieth of the whole. The density of population for the whole of the Agency is about 95 to the square mile.

Most of the territory under this Agency is well-cultivated and fertile, and the whole of the Malwa plateau most fertile, producing in abundance and excellence, wheat, rice and other grains, and pulses, sugar-cane, cotton and especially opium, the poppy producing it being so generally cultivated, that when in bloom it gives the country the appearance of a vast garden. The state of Jaora contains the best poppy producing lands in Malwa, and yields yearly about 1,000 chests of opium. The town of Rutlam is the principal opium mart in western Malwa. Tobacco is also much cultivated and is of excellent quality.

The mineral resources of the whole country are extensive, iron, coal, copper and limestone abound, and about twelve or fifteen miles north-east of the town of Panna, the capital of the state of that name in Bundelkhand, is an adamantiferous tract from which diamonds are extracted, of the value of several thousand pounds sterling a year, the revenues from this source being divided between Panna and Charkari. The mines are less prosperous now than formerly, but it is believed that inexhaustible diamond producing strata exist in that locality, and if the mines were properly worked their productiveness would be found not to have diminished. The diamonds produced here are of four kinds, the motichal, clear and brilliant; the manik of greenish hue; the Panna tinged with orange; and the banspat, blackish. The stones are, however, inferior to the Golconda diamonds written of in Part III., Madras Presidency.

A trunk road from Gwalior to Bombay viâ Indore runs through the whole length of the Central India division, and the 'Holkar State Railway' from Khandwa station on the Great Indian Peninsula Line, runs through Indore to Rutlam and Neemuch, beyond which the line to Nusseerabad is in course of construction, as also is a branch line, called the 'Bhopal State Railway', connecting Bhopal with the Great Indian Peninsula Railway at Itarsi station. The Jubbulpore extension line of the East Indian Railway, from Allahabad to Jubbulpore, runs through Bundelkhand.

Notes.

The Polygars in the Northern Circars were at first treated as Feudatories, but in 1802, a permanent settlement was introduced, and these chiefs became and were classed as ordinary Zamindars, no longer holding a political status. The chiefs of Vizianagram and Jeypur bear the title of Maharaja, and those of Tiruvur, Pallaveram, Bobilli, Salur, Sripuram, Kolanka, Kotham, Kalahasti, Karvetnagar, Pithapuram, and Venkatagiri, the title of Raja.

The Ganjam Agency.

In the Zamindaris of Surada, Chinna-Kimedi, Parla-Kimedi, Pedda-Kimedi, Bodagada, Surangi, Jorada, Jalantra, Mandusa, Budarasinghi and Kattangiah, in the western part of the Ganjam District, are certain portions of country known as the Maliah Tracts, inhabited chiefly by Khonds and Savarahs. These tracts cover an area of 3,500 square miles, with a population of 186,000 souls, and though held on Sanads by their respective Zamindars, who derive more or less revenue therefrom, are under the direct jurisdiction of the Collector of Ganjam, who is also Agent. The term Maliah or Malwa means highlands, and is the name given by the Khonds to these upland regions of the district.

The Vizagapatam Agency.

This Agency embraces Jeypur with those portions of the Zamindaris of Madagulu or Madgole, Pachipenta, Kurupam and Merangi which lie within the hills, also the hill Mutas of Palcondah, those of Golakonda, or Golgonda, and the hill Zamindari of Kasipur. These tracts are scheduled districts in the same way as the Ganjam Maliahs.

BRIEF GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

Area, Position, Boundaries, &c.

The Madras Presidency occupies the southern portion of the peninsula of India, with a considerable extension north-eastward along the coast of the Bay of Bengal. It is bounded on the north and north-west by the districts of Kanara and Dharwar of the Bombay Presidency, Hyderabad or the Nizam's Dominions, and the southern native states of Bastar and Kalahandi of the Central Provinces; on the north-east by the province of Orissa under the Bengal jurisdiction; on the east and south-east by the Bay of Bengal; on the south by the Indian Ocean, and on the west by the Arabian Sea. The eastern portion of the Presidency extends from Cape Comorin, in latitude 8° 4′, to the northern extremity of district Ganjam, touching Orissa in latitude 20° 18′; the western portion extends to the coast at the eastern extremity of Mysore native state, in latitude 13° 50′. The greatest length from the extremity of Ganjam to Cape Comorin being about 1,000 miles, and the greatest width, measured from the coast at the eastern extremity of Mysore to Madras, about 390 miles. The total extent of sea coast is about 1,700 miles, without, however, any single really good harbour. Exclusive of the native states, the area of the Presidency is estimated at 138,318 square miles, including these states it may be taken at 148,063 square miles.

The districts of Ganjam, Vizagapatam, Godavari and Kistna, are now known as the Northern Districts or the Northern Circars. Prior to 1859-60 these Circars consisted of five districts, but in that year the three districts of Rajamundry, Masulipatam and Guntoor were divided to form the present Godavari and Kistna districts. Under the Nizam's government the divisions of these two last named districts were as follow: — Guntoor, Condapilly, Ellore, Rajamundry and Chicacole.

The districts of Nellore, Madras, Chingleput and South Arcot, are called the East Central Districts. In 1859-60 Madras town and Chingleput were amalgamated into a single district, but in 1870 this amalgamated district was again divided as before, leaving the administration of the Madras town district in the hands of the Sea Customs Collector.

North Arcot, Kurnool, Bellary and Cuddapah are called the Ceded Districts; Salem, Coimbatore and Nilgiris, the West Central Districts; Tanjore, Trichinopoly, Madura and Tinnevelly, the Southern Districts; and South Canara and Malabar, the West Coast Districts.

Topography, &c.

The principal features which give character to the portion of India embraced within the Presidency of Madras, are the two mountain ranges which run through it on the east and on the west, viz., the Eastern and the Western Ghats. The former range runs for some distance almost parallel with the eastern coast, the latter with the western. Starting from the north, the Eastern Ghats, running with the coast to about 50 miles north of Madras, sweep to the south-west and eventually unite, in the vicinity of the Nilgiris, with the Western Ghats, which extend to Cape Comorin on the one side, and to the north-western extremity of the Presidency on the other. These two great ranges may be said to form,—one on the south-west, the other on the south-east,—the buttresses or walls of the triangular table-land included between them, commonly called the Deccan. Though this table-land rises considerably towards the south, it has a general slope of surface to the east and south-east as indicated by the large streams flowing in that direction, and emptying themselves into the Bay of Bengal. The lowland lying between the base of the Western Ghats, and the sea, is of less breadth than that lying in the like situation with respect to the Eastern Ghats, being in some places not more than 25, and nowhere more than 50 miles in breadth. Compared with the Western Ghats, the Eastern, south of the Godavari river, are of trifling elevation, the mean height of the chain being about 1,500 feet, but attaining a higher elevation as the range approaches southward, near Madras and the junction with the other range in the vicinity of the Nilgiris. North of the Godavari river the Eastern Ghats rise to an elevation of upwards of 5,000 feet, the highest points being Gallikonda 5,346 feet, and Galli Parvatam 4,988 feet. The Western Ghats on the other hand, rise to over 6,000 feet, and at the Nilgiris culminate to 8,760 feet. The Palni hills to the south of the Nilgiris, attain a height of from 6,500 to 7,100 feet; they are about 80 miles distant from Trichinopoly, and 40 from Madura, and have been recently proposed as a site for a Sanitarium. The Shervaroy hills on the east of the Nilgiris, approach to within five miles of Salem and attain a height of 5,260 feet. Owing to the superior height of the western range, and its vicinity to the coast, all the head waters of the great rivers of the Presidency originate there, and traverse the Eastern Ghats on their way to the sea.

The principal rivers are the Godavari, the Krishna or Kistna, in their lower courses, the Penner, Paler and the Cauvery. Numerous feeders, the chief of which is the Tungabadhra, from the Western Ghats and the plateau of the Deccan, discharge themselves into the Kistna and Penner. The rivers of the western and and southern coasts are numerous, but necessarily short in their courses and unimportant, as are also those in the extreme north-eastern districts of the Presidency.

The coast on the west, called Malabar, from the north-western extremity to Mangalore, is in general, bold nde rocky; from Mangalore to Cape Comorin, it is considerably lower and either muddy or sandy, having several shallow inlets termed "Backwaters," extending in some cases a considerable distance (a couple of hundred miles) inland, parallel with the coast, more or less navigable, and receiving the drainage of the streams coming from the Western Ghats. Cochin is situated on the principal of these openings. Cape Comorin itself is low and sandy, but a few miles inland, and to the north of the extreme point, the southern summits of the ghats rise in lofty and majestic peaks known as the Palni hills. To the north-east of Cape Comorin, the coast, for 166 miles, is low, rocky and much beset by reefs and is little frequented, as navigation, northwards into the Bay of Bengal, is obstructed and rendered impracticable for vessels by a sandbank extending from the main-land of India to Ceylon, called Adam's bridge, which has only two navigable channels, not however deep enough for the passage of large craft. The sea here, called the gulf of Manar, has on the coast to the north-west the harbour of Tuticorin. From Adam's bridge to Point Calymere, on the north of Palk's straits, the shore has no bold features. From Point Calymere the Coromandel Coast commences, and holds a direction due north across the estuaries of the Cauvery, which enclose a delta having a base of 82 miles towards the sea, where are the ports of Negapatam and Tranquebar; the Coromandel Coast continues to hold a northerly direction for 297 miles further to Gondegam, where the river Musi is considered to bound it to the northward, and retains the same character of slight elevation and general sandy formation, with shallow water along shore. Blackwood harbour is the only shelter throughout this distance for large ships; at all the other ports along this coast ships must be anchored in the open sea. From Gondegam the shore is termed the Golgonda Coast, holding a direction north-east for 270 miles to the southern point of district Vizagapatam, and passing the estuaries of the Kistna and Godavari. Here the coast is so low that it is often inundated. Masulipatam, Cocanada and Coringa are the most important maritime places on this coast, which terminates in Latitude 17° 15′. The Orissa coast commences at this point, here the coast becomes bold and rocky, and retains this character for about 230 miles to the north-eastern extremity of the Presidency. The eastern coast has a few extensive lakes which require notice. To the north of Madras is Lake Pulicat, an extensive salt-water lagoon, about 33 miles in length from north to south, by 11 in breadth; it contains several islands and communicates with the sea by very narrow channels. Lake Colair in the Kistna district, between the rivers Kistna and Godavari, formed by the overflowing of those rivers, and having a length of 47 miles and a breadth of 14. Lake Chilka on the Orissa coast, in the extreme north-east, under the Bengal jurisdiction, 42 miles in length, by 15 in breadth, and separated from the sea only by a narrow bank of sand. The name signifies salt lake; it is very shallow, and nowhere exceeds six feet in depth.

The rivers of southern India give but little assistance to inland communication, but by means of canals and excellent roads everywhere, this convenience is attained; there are besides several lines of Railway running through the Presidency, the Madras Railway, 858 miles in length, and the Southern India Railway, 612 miles long, connect Madras with Bombay and the principal towns in the Deccan, as well as with those in the west and south; the extension from Bangalore, to connect Madras with Mysore, also a branch line to Pondicherry being in progress. Steamers also leave Madras regularly for almost every principal port in India.

Climate and Sanataria.

From the physical features of the country the climate is necessarily very varied. The arid plains of the east coast, with the thermometer occasionally rising to 115° in the shade, form during a greater portion of the year, a striking contrast to the green valleys of Malabar and Canara on the west, where the maximum heat is below 90°. The moisture brought up by the south-west monsoon being condensed by the Western Ghats, the average rainfall between that range of hills and the western coast is over 120 inches, most of which falls between the beginning of June and the end of August. A considerable portion of rain finds its way over the ghats to the central districts, while even those districts on the eastern coast, where river irrigation prevails, reap the benefit of this monsoon in the increased volume of water from the slopes of the Western Ghats. The north-east monsoon sets in about the end of September, and during its continuance the average rainfall does not exceed 30 inches. Previous to the rains, the country in the eastern and central districts is everywhere parched, and life is endured with difficulty, Along the coasts, the sea breezes which set in shortly after noon almost throughout the year, do much to moderate the temperature. The table-land or undulating surface on the summits of the Nilgiris and Palnis, having an elevation of from 5,000 to 7,000 feet enjoys the mild climate of the finest part of the temperate zone. The temperature on the Nilgiris varies much less from north to south than from east to west. Mists and heavy fogs are not unfrequent in the rainy season, and the eastern side is less moist than the western. From the end of October to May, a sky clear and nearly cloudless is the rule; September and October are pretty irregular in the quantity of rain they bring. In the upper ranges of the Annamalle hills, which attain an elevation equal to that of the Nilgiris in general, the temperature is much the same as in Ootacamund. The rains here for six months of the year are very heavy, and it is doubtful whether the climate during these six months is at all suitable for the residence of Europeans. The climate is greatly influenced by the monsoons,—periodical winds produced by the unequal heating of the continent during certain seasons of the year,—the regular alternation of which is most remarkable, the transition from one to the other being usually marked by great atmospheric disturbance.

Ootacamund is the sanitarium of the Presidency on the Nilgiris, but another has been formed on the Palnis. Other stations on the Nilgiris are Attara Malle, 4,500 feet, Dodabetta, 8,640 feet, Jakunari, about 5,000 feet, Coonoor, 5,760 feet, and Kotagiri, 6,100 feet. The state of Soondoor contains a very important hill sanitarium for Europeans in the plateau of Ramandroog, which has been chiefly utilised as a convalescent depôt for the troops serving in the Ceded Districts. It is distant from Bellary thirty-eight miles and from Secundrabad 270 miles, and stands 1,825 feet above Bellary, and 1,200 feet above the surrounding plains. The length of the plateau from north to south is a mile and a half, with a varying breadth of from half to three quarters of a mile.

Staples and Manufactures.

The chief staples of the Presidency are rice, maize, wheat, millet, ragi and the pulses amongst food grains; oil-seeds, indigo, tobacco, sugar-cane, chillies, pepper, yams, plaintains and betel-leaf amongst garden crops, and as a special crop, cotton has a large cultivation. The trees most grown for their fruits are cocoanut, arecanut, jack, tamarind and mango. Cocoanut palms flourish most luxuriantly on the banks of the estuaries and back waters of the western districts of Malabar and Canara. The most valuable product of the Presidency is ship timber, abounding in the forests of Malabar, Canara and Travancore, as well as in the forests of the Eastern Ghats, principally Teak. Sandalwood, supplied to the Chinese market, is also obtained from the forests of Malabar and Coorg. Coffee has been very extensively cultivated and is now an important crop. The principal coffee tracts of southern India lie along the western coast, and coffee estates extend in nearly an unbroken line along the summits and slopes of the Western Ghats, from the northern limits of Mysore down to Cape Comorin, in the Nilgiris, the Shervaroy and Palni hills and in several districts of the Presidency. Tea cultivation has not the same interest in southern India as coffee cultivation, and there are few plantations except on the Nilgiris. Tobacco is grown more or less throughout the Presidency, with the exception of Malabar and the hill ranges, but the chief localities of production are the alluvial lands of the Godavari district, where is grown the well-known Lunka tobacco (so named from the Lunkas or river islands on which it is cultivated), and the Coimbatore and Madura districts. Chincona is also grown on the Nilgiris, and there are now six plantations for the supply of this febrifuge.

The mineral wealth of the Presidency is considerable. Gold is known to exist in the Wynad and Nilgiris, and the attention of capitalists has been lately drawn to these auriferous tracts. Iron ore occurs in several parts in abundance, and extensive foundries have been established in Beypore and South Arcot. Manganese exists in Mysore, the Nilgiris and Bellary. Antimony and silver, copper and lead ore in the districts of Madura, Cuddapah, Kurnool and Nellore, also in Mysore. *Diamonds of moderate value and garnets in abundance are met with in the Cuddapah, Kurnool, Godavari and Vizagapatam districts, and coal is found on the banks of the Godavari near Chinnore.

The usual manufactures are sugar, indigo, pottery, carpets, hardware, cutlery, saddlery, cheroots, working in metals, filagree and basket work, and the weaving of silk and cotton cloths and coarse woollens.

The Pearl and Chank or Conch-shell fisheries, carried on entirely under Government management, are at present in charge of the Master Attendant of Tuticorin. The gross receipts from these fisheries in 1877-78, were Rs. 31,267, the expenses were Rs. 8,363, leaving a net profit of Rs. 22,904.

Form of Administration.

The administration of the Madras Presidency is vested in a Governor with a Council of three Members. For administrative purposes the Presidency is divided into twenty-one Districts, each of which is placed under the charge of a Collector and Magistrate, all being subject to the direct control of a Board of Revenue composed of three Members. In the district of the Nilgiris, the principal administrative officer is termed the Commissioner of the Nilgiris. Each district is again sub-divided into Taluks, the general superintendence of which is distributed among the Assistants to the Collector, a special local revenue and magisterial head, called a Tahsildar, being in charge of each Taluk, and in larger Taluks the Tahsildar being aided by one or more Deputy Tahsildars and Sub-Magistrates. The administration of civil and criminal justice is under the superintendence of a High Court, assisted by District Judges and Subordinate Judges, the latter are usually natives.

Census.

The first Census of the Presidency was taken in 1822, when the population was returned at 13,476,923. Fourteen years after, or in 1836-37, a second census was taken, when the numbers returned were 13,967,395, showing an increase of only 490,472. The first of the quinquennial enumerations was taken in 1851-52, when the population was found to have risen to 22,031,697, or an increase of 58 per cent. in 15 years. Other quinquennial enumerations in succession showed the numbers as given in the margin. The last census taken was on the 15th November 1871, the resulting figures showed the population to be 31,281,177, being a gross increase of 4,742,125 over the figures of 1866-67, giving an average density of 226 persons to the square mile for the whole presidency. The sexes are almost equally divided, the proportion being ninety-nine females to every one hundred males.

* The far famed Golcondah, a fortress seven miles to the north-west of Hyderabad, the capital of the Nizam's dominions, is proverbially famous for its diamonds, yet it has obtained this fame vicariously, for the diamonds which are cut and polished at Golcondah, are usually brought thither for that purpose from Partial, close to the southern frontier of the Nizam's country, and about sixteen miles south-west of Ellore in the Ganjam district. But there are other places in the same locality where diamonds are or have been found: the names of these places are Mallavelli, Alkur, Parthenipadu, Pratalli, Wastapille and Kedavetti Kall. The hills here are a continuation of the sandstone range which extends east from Banganapilli, Kondapilli and Mallavelli, in all of which localities the matrix of the diamond is a conglomerate sandstone. From this locality the world has been supplied for centuries with diamonds of the purest water. The Pitt diamond, weighing in its cut state 136¾ carats; the Kohinoor or Mountain of Light, and others were found here, and there is fair reason to suppose that the wealth of the Partial region has not been exhausted, and that the appliances of modern machinery, directed by men of science, may bring to light other gems that have not been discovered by rude native processes of search.

BRIEF GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

Area, Position, Boundaries, &c.

The Province or State of Mysore occupies a position physically well defined in the south of India. It is a table-land, situated in the angle where the Eastern and the Western Ghat ranges converge into the group of the Nilgiri Hills, and lying between 11° 38′ and 15° 2′ North Latitude, and 74° 43′ and 78° 37′ East Longitude. Its extreme breadth from east to west is about 290 miles, and extreme length from north to south about 230 miles. It is bounded on the north by the Bombay Collectorate of Dharwar and the Madras Collectorate of Bellary; on the south and east by the districts of Malabar, Salem, Coimbatore, Bellary, Cuddapah and North Arcot of the Madras Presidency, and on the west by the small province of Coorg, the South Canara Collectorate of the Madras Presidency and the North Canara district of the Bombay Presidency. On the west the frontier of the state approaches at one part to within ten miles of the sea, but in general preserves a distance of from thirty to fifty miles from the coast: on the east the nearest point is not less than 120 miles. The southern extremity is about 250 miles from Cape Comorin. The area of the province from the latest information, is estimated at 27,081 square miles, and this estimate will continue to be accepted for statistical purposes, until a more accurate computation is arrived at by the Topographical surveys now being carried on in the province.

Topography, &c.

That portion of the Mysore province which is above the ghats is often called the table-land, but this denomination does not accurately represent the character of the country, which is everywhere undulating, and almost entirely free from the level tracts which characterise the greater part of Upper India. One striking physical feature of Mysore, consists in the huge piles of rocks known as Drugs, rising abruptly in many parts to 1,500 feet above the plateau, some solitary, others clustered, and which are everywhere visible; most of them have been fortified from time immemorial, rendering them well nigh impregnable strong-holds with the advantage of an unfailing supply of water at the summit. The Eastern Ghats form the frontier on the east, separating Mysore from the British provinces in the Carnatic. In many parts the ascent over them into Mysore is steep, while in others it is an easy gradient. The country rises gradually from these ghats towards Bangalore, which is situated in the most elevated portion of the Mysore plateau, and about 3,062 feet above sea level. On the north-west, beyond the Chitaldroog range of hills, there is a gradual fall through the broad valley which leads to the Tungabadhra river, near the vilage of Harihar, the altitude of which above the sea is only about 1,800 feet. To the south-west, by Seringapatam and Hassan, there is a more marked descent, abruptly terminated by the western range of ghats, comprising in this direction the Nilgiri and Coorg hills, and further north the Manjarabad and Nagar ranges, known as the 'Malnad' or hill country, the chief peaks of which are loftier than those of the eastern hills. The loftiest elevations in Mysore, on the east, are Sivaganga, about 30 miles from Bangalore, reaching a height of 4,559 feet above the sea level; and Nundydroog, thirty-six miles from Bangalore, 4,810 feet above sea level, from whence the river Penner takes its rise; and the peaks of the Bellakalrangam hills in the Ashtagram division, varying in elevation from four to five thousand feet. These hills are clothed with rank vegetation, and uninhabited save by a rude tribe known as Soligars; on the west, Kudurcmukha in the Nagar division, 6,215 feet, is one of the highest peaks in Mysore and a remarkable landmark visible from the sea, as well as from above and below the Ghats; and, the Baba

Budan mountains in the Nagar division, named from a Mahomedan saint, whose tomb is on one of the peaks at an elevation of 6214 feet, the highest point on this range being Mulainagiri 6,317 feet. These hills are inhabited and contain several coffee plantations, some of which are probably the oldest in Mysore.

The principal rivers in Mysore are the Tunga and the Bhadra rising in the north-west of the province; uniting they form the Tungabhadra which flows northwards and eastwards till it joins the Krishna below Kurnool; its banks are too high for irrigation purposes. The Cauvery, rising in Coorg, passes through the province in a south-easterly direction, receiving the Hemavati, the Sokapavani the Shamsha and the Arkavati from the north, and the Lakshmantirtha and the Kapini from the south; the Cauvery and its tributaries supply numerous irrigation channels and tanks, their courses through the province being marked by a green fringe of cultivation. The Vedavati, rising near the Baba Budan hills, flowing due north and joining the Tungabhadra; the Penner, the Paler and Pannair which rise in the eastern part of the province. The waters of these rivers are detained and converted into chains of tanks, but they become large rivers before reaching the sea. Owing to their rocky or shallow beds, none of the above rivers are navigable, and most are fordable during the dry months. There are no natural lakes in Mysore, but there are nearly 38,000 artificial reservoirs or tanks, some of which are of considerable magnitude. The largest is the Sulikere tank in the Shimoga district, 40 miles in circumference.

The principal forests are found clothing the sides of the western mountains, they abound in teak, blackwood and other valuable kinds of timber. There are good roads throughout the province, and a branch of the Madras Railway, 84½ miles long, reaches Bangalore; the extension to Mysore, from Bangalore, called the "Mysore State Railway" is now in course of completion.

Climate.

The climate of Mysore is sensibly affected by its considerable elevation above the sea. It is temperate but not so healthy as might be expected, owing to the prevalence of fever in many localities. The year may be divided into three seasons, the hot, the rainy and the cold. In the hot season the thermometer ranges from 69° to 90′ in the shade, and in the cold season from 50° to 77′. The nights are seldom hot, the mornings and evenings are always cool if not cold, and the air is very elastic. The cold season is generally free from rain and lasts till the end of February. The rain in April and May is generally very heavy, often filling the tanks in a few hours. The province is favored by two monsoons, the south-west and the north-east, the former commencing at the beginning of June and closing about the end of August. The north-east monsoon sets in at the beginning of October and generally ceases about the middle of November. The rain is more continuous than heavy throughout the greater part of the country, but in the tracts verging upon the Western Ghats it is unintermitting and puts a stop to all traffic. The annual rainfall of these regions is nearly five times that of the rest of the country, the quantity diminishing rapidly as the distance from the Ghats increases. The close of the rainy season in November is marked by dense fogs which prevail all over the country during December and January. Electric storms are common and excessively violent.

Staples and Manufactures.

The crops chiefly grown in Mysore are rice, ragi, millets, gram, wheat, sugar-cane, oilseeds, cotton, opium, betel, cocoanut and tobacco. Coffee is extensively cultivated, and the cultivation of this berry now takes rank as one of the most important industries of the country. Lac, gums, pepper and resin are also produced, and sandalwood grows spontaneously throughout the province. Many of the fruits and vegetables of Europe are also successfully cultivated.

The trade of the country being difficult to develope, owing to its land-locked position, the mountain barriers which separate it from the surrounding countries on three sides, and the want of navigable rivers, the manufactures are on a small scale and mostly carried on to supply native consumption. Gold dust is found, but there is no metal except iron in any degree of abundance. Garnets are frequently to be met with and kankar, or calcareous concrete for road making, exists in considerable quantities between Bangalore and Seringapatam. Common salt and carbonate of soda impregnate the soil in many places, and are extracted for domestic or manufacturing purposes.

Form of Administration.

In 1831-32 in consequence of the misgovernment of the then ruling prince, the Government of India assumed the direct administration of the affairs of Mysore, and first appointed two Joint Commissioners in whose hands the Government of the province was vested. In 1834 a single officer was nominated as sole Commissioner in supercession of the Joint Commissioners, and to whom, in 1843, were also delegated the duties of Resident, that office as a separate post being abolished. In 1862 the administration was re-organised on the model of the Punjab system, and a great number of reforms were instituted, all tending towards the introduction of the regulation system. The province was divided into three divisions and eight districts, each division being placed under a Superintendent and each district under a Deputy Superintendent, aided by Assistant Superintendents for the several Taluks into which the districts were sub-divided, and corresponding with Tahsils in northern India, the average area of each Taluk being about 333 square miles. These Taluks were again sub-divided into Hoblis, each of which was placed under the revenue charge of a native officer styled Shekdar, they number 500. In 1869 the title of Commissioner was changed into that of Chief Commissioner, by whom the Government of the province is now administered, and in 1873, the designations of Superintendent, Deputy and Assistant Superintendents were changed into those of Commissioner, Deputy and Assistant Commissioners, respectively. Judicial Assistants were also appointed to each district for the disposal of civil suits.

Census.

The first general census of Mysore was taken in 1840-41 and the next in 1851-52, since which periods annual returns were made up until a general census of the province was again taken in November 1871, which last is regarded as fairly reliable; according to it the total population of the province was 5,055,412 souls, 2,535,924 being males, and 2,519,488 females. Of the total population the agricultural classes are in the proportion of one-fourth, the non-agricultural three-fourths.

BRIEF GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

What Wales is to England, Coorg is to Mysore in miniature, and though governed by the same Chief Commissioner, the province is British territory and forms no part of Mysore. Coorg occupies the summits and eastern slopes of the Western Ghats, within the degrees of North Latitude 11° 55′ and 12° 50,′ and East Longitude 75° 25′ and 76° 14,′ and has an area, of 2,080* square miles; its greatest length from north to south being sixty, and from west to east forty miles. Coorg is bounded on the north by the Netravati, Kumaradhari and Hemavati rivers, which separate it from the southern taluks of South Canara and the Manjarabad taluk of the Mysore district; on the south the province is bounded by the Brahmagiri mountains which divide it from the Wainad taluk of the Malabar distict; on the west, by the South Canara and Malabar districts of Madras, and on the east by the Mysore and Hassan districts of the province of Mysore, the river Cauvery marking for some distance a portion of the eastern boundary. A narrow arm about twelve miles long, by about six wide, projects northwards into Mysore on the north-east. The greater part of the western frontier is from twenty to thirty miles from the sea. The name Coorg has been anglicised from the native names "Kudagu" or "Kodumale," signifying "mountainous country" or "steep mountains."

In physical features the province of Coorg differs greatly from most of the surrounding districts, owing to the mountainous and wooded character of the country. It is a constant succession of steep ridges and deep ravines, the whole clothed with forest more or less dense, very dense on the eastward towards Mysore, where it is almost wholly uninhabited. Advancing westward the forests decrease, leaving Kiggatnad comparatively open, and Yelsavirshime a champaign tract. The Western Ghats running north and south, with an elevation of from 5,000 to 6,000 feet, divide the territory into two unequal portions. On the southern limits the Brahmagiri or Marenad range of hills, running in a direction from east to west, constitutes a formidable natural barrier between Coorg and Wainad, a sub-division of the Malabar district, with a general elevation of 4,500 feet, the highest peaks being Davasi-betta, Hanuman-betta, Kadanga-male and Peru-male. The table-land upon which Mercara or Madakere is situated, has an average altitude of 3,500 feet, and is crossed in all directions by minor hills and ridges, being bounded on the west by the Ghats, which culminate near the Bisilu Pass in the Pushpagiri hill, 5,626 feet above sea level, the summit of which commands an extensive prospect over Coorg, Canara and Mysore. Other detached hills and ridges, though numerous, are not deserving of any particular notice. Some few detached ranges are situated along the eastern boundary, not however remarkable for either elevation or extent, amongst them the peaks of Siddesvar and Maukal-betta are the most prominent, the former guards the pass that gives entrance to Coorg. Near Mercara the hills are closer together and more abrupt, and the ravines deeper and more wild. Towards Fraserpet the country assumes the champaign character of the Mysore plateau, with scattered solitary hills. South of Mercara the country is open with beautiful grassy downs. The general declivity is to the north-east and east, as indicated by the Cauvery and its tributaries flowing in that direction and receiving the drainage of nearly four-fifths of the country.

None of the rivers of Coorg are considerable as to breadth or depth, and the inequalities of the country through which they shape their course, render them unfit for navigation or for use in irrigation. The principal rivers, rising in Coorg, are the Cauvery, Lakshmantirth, Surnavati, Hemavati, Barapole and Nujikal. The Barapole is navigable from the sea to within sixteen miles off the foot of the Ghats. The Cauvery rises in the Brahmagiri range, at a place called Tale Kaveri, where there are temples of great repute among the Hindus, which are yearly resorted to by thousands of pilgrims from the adjoining countries, the river being considered the holiest in India, the Ganges not excepted. Near Fraserpet this river during the monsoons rises to a height of from twenty to thirty feet. All the mountain streams form cascades of great beauty in their courses through the hills, especially the Jessy fall near Mercara.

The climate of Coorg is temperate and humid. The rainfall during the last thirteen years, has averaged 123 inches in the year. Of late years the denudation of forests and the natural decay of the bamboo, have had the effect of rendering the rainfall less regular and heavy. In May, the hottest month, the thermometer has never been known to exceed 86°, and the mean temperature in that month is 70°. In September, which is the coldest month, the mean temperature is 64°, the average temperature throughout the year is 66½°. The hot season commences in February and continues till the close of May, succeeded by the rainy season, when the south-west monsoon sets in and prevails from June to September. The climate, in spite of its excessive humidity, is on the whole salubrious, except in the valleys where fever greatly prevails; it is a remarkable fact, however, that it appears to be decidedly inimical to the cure of cuts, wounds and sores, which are often totally unmanageable without change of air.

Rice is the chief staple of Coorg. The cultivation of cardamoms is next in importance to that of rice. Coffee and sugar-cane are extensively produced, and tea, chinchona, cotton and tobacco are also grown to a small extent. English fruits and vegetables are satisfactorily grown, and the Coorg oranges are celebrated. The cardamom is indigenous to certain forests in Coorg called males, situated on the line of the ghats at an elevation of from 2,500 to 5,000 feet above sea level. The cultivation of this plant is to a great number of Coorgs next in importance to that of rice, and the possession of a fine cardamom jungle is regarded as a mine of wealth. The gardens come into bearing in October and September of the fourth year, and continue to give good crops for seven years, when they begin to decline. The plant can be easily grown from seed, and a garden of 500 square yards will on an average yield 13lbs. weight of good cardamoms. Coffee is also a staple commodity of Coorg, and to it the province owes much of its prosperity. The plant is propagated by cuttings, but is usually grown from seed, which is put down in March or April, the maiden crop being given generally in the third year; an acre of land yields on an average six to eight cwts. of coffee, and an estate in good order should give a return of 50 per cent. on the outlay. There are no mines in Coorg and the whole of the metal in use is imported. Manufacturing industry has made little or no progress amongst the population, and almost every article in use in the country has in consequence to be imported.

At present Coorg is administered by the Chief-Commissioner of Mysore, residing at Bangalore, who is in direct subordination to the Government of India. The Superintendent of Coorg, an officer of the Mysore Commission, is the chief local authority, exercising civil, criminal and revenue powers within its limits, under subordination to the Chief Commissioner. For administrative purposes the province is divided into six taluks, each in charge of a Sub-Magistrate, called a Subhedar. The taluks are again sub-divided into twenty-four nads containing on an average about 67 square miles each. In north Coorg the nads, or as they are called Hoblis, are much smaller and more thickly populated. Each Nad or Hobli is in charge of a Parpattegar, vested with subordinate magisterial powers. Coorg is a non-regulation province.

The only assemblages of dwellings which can with any propriety be denominated towns, are Mercara the capital and a military station, the native portion of the town being known as Mahadevapet; Fraserpet, the monsoon head-quarters of the Superintendent, and a town of small extent, situated on the eastern frontier and at the foot of the hills on which Mercara stands; Virajendrapet and Somwarpet. The dwellings of the Coorgs in the country generally are isolated, and it is only here and there that the eye can detect the thatched houses of the inhabitants betrayed by solitary wreaths of smoke.

A previous computation showed the population to be 113,689, the last census taken in November 1871, gave the number of inhabitants at 168,312, showing an increase of about 48 per cent., the males numbering 94,454, the females 73,858

Notes on the above Native States.

The numerous native states comprised within the Bombay Presidency, form several distinct groups, occupying an estimated area of 72,960 square miles, or about one-third of the entire area of the Presidency, with a population of about 8,954,590 souls, yielding an estimated revenue of Rs. 44,596,467. They have been arranged according to their geographical positions. The superintendence of Political matters within their respective divisions is vested in three Commissioners, except in the more important states of Kolhapur and Cutch, and those included in the Kattywar Agency, which are under Political Agents in direct correspondence with the Government.

The principal northern state occupying the largest portion of Gujarat, with parts of Khandesh and Kattywar, is that of Baroda, now under (during the young Gaikhwar's minority) the direct administration of the Government of India.

There are four Political Agencies around Baroda, consisting of groups of states, which are or have been more or less connected with Baroda by conquest or payment of tribute, these are the states of the Palanpur Superintendency, the Mahikanta, the Rewakanta and the Kattywar Agencies. The geographical position of the three first may be described as being on the broken scarps and slopes descending, on the west side, from the Malwa plateau to the gulf of Cambay and the Rann of Cutch. This wild hill country connects the Vindhya range with the Aravalli hills, and may be in short called the western rear of the great Malwa plateau.

Cutch, (Kachh) or the sea coast land lying between the peninsula of Kattywar on the south, and the province of Sind on the north, extends from 20° 47′ to 24° 0′ North Latitude, and 68° 26′ to 71° 10′ East Longitude. It is a belt of land about 160 miles from east to west, and about 70 miles from north to south, cut off almost entirely from the continent of India by the Rann on the north and east, and by the gulf of Cutch on the south. Its isolated position makes it a nursery of excellent seamen and gives its people a distinct nationality. For administrative purposes Cutch is partitioned off into eight sub-divisions, as follows, Abdasa with Nakhtarana, 1,525 square miles; Anjar, 420 square miles; Bhachan, 475 square miles; Bhuj with Khavda, 1,400 square miles; Lakhpat, 810 square miles; Mandvi, 515 square miles; Mundra, 390 square miles; Rapar with Khadir, 965 square miles. The average annual rainfall at Bhuj the capital, is fourteen inches. The chief minerals of Cutch are coal, iron, alum, salt and building stone, and the state has long been famous for the superior design and workmanship of its gold and silver ware.

The Palanpur group of states, thirteen in number, occupies an area of about 7,775 square miles, and has a population of about 502,600 souls, and a revenue of Rs. 12,28,300. The chief states of this group are Palanpur and Radhanpur. The country under this superintendency lies between 24° 4′ and 23° 25′ North Latitude, and 71° 16′ and 72° 46′ East Longitude.

The Mahikanta group of states, in the extreme north-east corner of the Bombay Presidency, lying between 23° 5′ and 24° 35′ North Latitude, and 72° 21′ and 73° 45′ East Longitude, comprises territorial divisions under no less than 89 chiefs, holding an area of about 4,000 square miles, with a population of about 447,000 souls, and a revenue of nearly eight lacs of Rupees. The principal state of this group is Idar. Of the rest, eleven are states of some consequence, with an average population of over 8,000 souls. The remaining forty-seven are small estates with an average population of 3,000 souls.

Rewakanta lies between the rivers Tapti and Mahi, within the parallels of 21° 23′ and 23° 33′ North, and meridians of 73° 3′ and 74° 18′ East, with an extreme length from north to south of about 140 miles, and a breadth from east to west varying from 10 to 50 miles. It derives its name from the Nerbudda or Rewa which passes through it from east to west. This agency comprises a group of one first class, five second class, and fifty-five smaller chiefships, with an estimated area of 4,792 square miles, a population of about 500,000 souls and a revenue of Rs. 16,27,000. Of the three Mehwas groups, the Sankhedas, 27 in number, lie on the right bank of the Nerbudda, between Rajpipla and Chhota Udepur; the Pandus, 23 in number, on the left bank of the Mahi, south of Balasinor, and the Dorkas, 3 in number, on the borders of the Mahi. Rajpipla is the chief state of this group.

The peninsula of Kattywar, surrounded on almost every side by the sea, and teeming with native chiefs, chiefly Rajputs, is divided into ten Pranths or districts, viz., Barda, Hallar, Gohelwad, Jhallawad, Kattywar, Babriawar, Sorath, Machukanta, Okhmandal, and Und Sarviya. This peninsula contains no less than 186 territorial divisions, great and small, the most extensive of which cover about 3,800 square miles, whilst other divisions contain but a single village; until completion of the survey, the area of the peninsula can only be arrived at approximately, and may be estimated at 22,000 square miles, with a population of 1,884,800 souls, and a revenue of Rs. 1,02,22,450. The smaller states are grouped into administrative sub-divisions, under officers subordinate to the Agency, but the jurisdiction of the more important chiefs has been maintained. The whole body of chiefs has been classified into seven grades in accordance with their jurisdictional privileges. All have moreover been divided into three classes, with reference to their position politically as regards the paramount power. For those in the first class, who rule over seven-tenths of the whole province, the Political Agent exercises no control over the management of their states. The powers of those in the second class are supplemented by the authority of the Political Agent, while in the case of the third class, the administration is virtually vested in the Political Officers. The great state of Jetpur, yielding a revenue of Rs. 10,00,000 has been ranked in the fifth class jurisdiction, on account of its being partitioned among eighteen shareholders.

The Native States in the south part of the Bombay Presidency represent the remains of the Maratha empire; the principal state of the southern group is Kolhapur.

The State of Peint lapsed to the British Government in 1878, and is now included in the Nasik district.

The State of Narukot is managed by British officials, and the Chief is allowed half the revenue as income.

The Mewasi and Dang states of the Khandesh Agency, lie in the north-west corner of the Khandesh district between the Nerbudda and Tapti rivers. The inhabitants of this wild forest region are Bhils, and the principal income of the chiefs is derived from the manufacture and sale of a liquor called "Maura."

BRIEF GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

Area, Position, Boundaries, &c.

Western India, or the territory under the administration of the Government of Bombay, known as the Bombay Presidency, extends from North Latitude 28° 45′, the most northerly point of Sind, to 13° 53′ in the extreme south of the Kanara district, and from East Longitude 66° 40′, the most westerly point of Sind, to 76° 30′ the eastern extremity of Khandesh, the extreme length of the whole territory being about 1,100 miles, and breadth about 300 miles. This jurisdiction comprises a total estimated area of 198,809 square miles, the area of the British possessions being 125,849 square miles and that of the native dependencies about 72,960* square miles. The Presidency is bounded on the west by the Arabian Sea; on the north-west and north by Beluchistan; on the north-east by the British district of Muzaffargarh, the native state of Bahawalpur under the Punjab jurisdiction, and the native states of Jeysulmere, Jodhpore, Sirohee, Oodeypore, Dongarpur and Banswara of the Rajputana Agency; on the east by the native states of Jabua, Ali-Rajpur, Barwani and Indore of the Central India Agency, the British district of Nimar in the Central Provinces, the Berar assigned district of Buldana and the Nizam's territory; and on the south by the native state of Mysore and the British district of Bellary in the Madras Presidency. An area of 360 square miles was transferred in 1878, from the British district of Khandesh to Indore, the population so transferred is not known.

* This figure is open to correction after the surveys are completed.

The only foreign possessions included within the limits of the Presidency are those of the Portuguese Gorvernment, viz., Goa, Daman and Diu, which are described at page 164.

Topography, &c.

The natural divisions of this Presidency may be classified as follows:—1st, The province of Sind—the valley of the lower Indus,—a flat plain about 360 miles in length from north to south, and about 270 miles in its greatest breadth from east to west, containing an area of 54,985 square miles, without hills and with but scant vegetation, depending for its productiveness entirely on the water of the river, obtained partly by natural inundation during the months of flood, and partly by canal irrigation. 2nd, Gujarat, embracing the peninsulas of Cutch and Kattywar, consisting—except in its northern parts—of rich and highly cultivated plains, alluvial in their origin but not now subject to inundation. 3rd, The Konkan, or the lowlands lying between the base of the Ghats and the sea, a difficult country intersected by creeks and abounding in isolated peaks and detached ranges of hills. 4th, The plains of Khandesh and the Deccan, drained by large rivers, with tracts of much fertility near their banks. 5th, The Karnatic, or country south of the Krishna, consisting of extensive plains of black or cotton soil in a high state of cultivation.

The districts of the Presidency are classified as follows, with reference to the natural divisions above named:—

Sind Districts.—Kurrachee or Karachi, Thar and Parkar, Hyderabad, Shikarpur and Upper Sind Frontier.

Gujarat Districts.—Surat, Broach, Kaira, Panch Mahals and Ahmedabad.

Konkan Districts.—Ratnagiri, Kolaba and Thana.

Deccan Districts.—Ahmednagar, Khandesh, Nasik, Poona, Satara and Sholapur.

South Maratha Districts.—Belgaum, Dharwar, Kaladgi, and Kanara.

The physical features which give their peculiar character to the above different parts of the Presidency, are the river Indus in Sind; the gulfs of Cutch and Cambay and the Rann of Cutch in Gujarat, and the rivers Nerbudda and Tapti in Gujarat proper; the river Tapti in Khandesh; the rivers Godavari and Bhima in the Deccan; and the Western Ghats, separating the plateaux of Khandesh and the Deccan from the low-lying plains of Gujarat and the Konkan.

The chief mountain ranges have a general direction from north to south. On the north of the Presidency are the Hala mountains, a continuation of the great Suleiman range on the right bank of the Indus, separating Sind from Baluchistan. Leaving Sind and passing by the ridges of low sand hills,—the leading feature of the deserts east of the Indus—and the isolated hills of the peninsulas of Cutch and Kattywar, the first extensive mountain chain is that separating Gujarat from the states of Central India. These hills rising in the neighbourhood of Mount Abu, and stretching southwards to the valley of the Nerbudda, may be considered as an extension of the Aravalli range. From the valley of the Nerbudda, still extending towards the south, run the hills known as the Western Ghats or Sahyadri range. This great range of hills, stretching southwards for upwards of 500 miles, forms the great characteristic feature of Western India; running parallel with the whole coast at a distance of from forty to fifty miles, with a general elevation of upwards of 1,800 feet, they contain individual peaks rising to more than double that height, and extend over a belt of country in many places not less than twenty miles in breadth. Their western declivity is abrupt though not generally precipitous, the land at their base being but slightly raised above the level of the sea. The landward or eastern slope is gentle, the crest of the range being in many places but slightly raised above the level of the plateau of the Deccan. Towards the northern extremity of this range, the country is rugged and broken, and contains isolated peaks and spurs which run eastwards, forming watersheds for the great rivers of the Deccan, the principal continuation to the eastward being the Satpura range, separating, as far as they extend, the valley of the Tapti from that of the Nerbudda, and the district of Khandesh from the territories of Holkar, and attaining an elevation of over 5,000 feet,—Toran Mall, on this range, in the vicinity of Dhulia, being about 5,434 feet at the summit, and 4,304 feet at the lake—and the Satmala or Ajanta hills, separating Khandesh from the Nizam's territory on the south. This last range is of less importance, being rather the northern slope of the plateau of the Deccan than a distinct range of hills.

In proportion to its area, the Bombay Presidency has the advantage of an extensive line of coast, regular and unbroken save by two deep inlets,—the gulfs of Cambay and Cutch,—and extending from Honawar in North Latitude 14° 3′, to Karachi in North Latitude 25°. This coast is for the most part rock-bound and difficult of access, and though it contains many estuaries forming fair weather ports for vessels engaged in the coasting trade, Bombay, Karachi and Karwar alone have harbours sufficiently landlocked to protect shipping during the prevalence of the south-west monsoon.

The chief river of Western India is the Indus, with a course from Attock to the sea of 962 miles. In the dry season the surface water varies in breadth from 500 to 1,600 yards. The greatest depth is found between Kalabagh and Attock, where it is 186 feet. The season of floods begins in March and continues to September, the average depth of the river rising during the inundation, from nine to twenty-four feet, and the velocity of the current increasing from three to seven miles an hour. The discharge of water, which in December is calculated at 40,857 cubic feet per second, is estimated in August, to attain to more than ten times that amount. Next to the Indus in length and in volume of water comes the Nerbudda. Rising in the Central Provinces and traversing the territory of Holkar, this river after a course of 700 miles falls into the gulf of Cambay, forming near its mouth the alluvial plain of Broach, one of the richest districts of the Presidency. For about one hundred miles from the sea, the Nerbudda is at all seasons navigable by small boats, and during the rains by vessels of from thirty to fifty tons burthen. The river next in importance is the Tapti, draining an extensive portion of country, and being from a commercial point of view, the most useful of Gujarat rivers. Of other Gujarat streams, the Sabarmati rising in the northern, and the Mahi rising in the southern extremity of the Mahikanta hills, deserve notice; these rivers drain the districts of northern Gujarat and fall into the sea near the head of the gulf of Cambay. In the Konkan there are several minor streams rising in the Sahyadri range, and flowing westward into the Arabian Sea, which though formidable torrents in the rains, fall off in volume with the return of fair weather, and during the hot season cease to flow. Rising further inland, the Canarese rivers in the south have a larger body of water and a more regular flow than the streams of the Konkan, one of them, the Sherawati, forcing its way through the western crests of the Ghats, plunges from the high to the low country by a succession of falls, the principal of which is 890 feet on the eastern side. The Godavari and Krishna rivers rising in the Sahyadri range, and collecting to themselves several tributary streams, some of them of considerable magnitude, drain the entire plain of the Deccan as they pass eastwards towards the Bay of Bengal.

With the exception of the Manchar lake in Sind and the Rann of Cutch, this Presidency is almost entirely without natural lakes: situated on the right bank of the Indus in the neighbourhood of the town of Sehwan, in district Karachi, the Manchar lake, when fed by the waters of the river during the months of flood, attains a length of twenty miles and a breadth of ten, covering a total area estimated at 180 square miles. The most peculiar natural feature of the Presidency is the Rann of Cutch, a salt marsh, an inland lake, or an arm of the sea according to the season of the year. The area of this Rann, divided into two portions, the greater and lesser Rann, has been estimated at about 9,000 square miles. It forms the western boundary of Gujarat, and when flooded during the rains, by uniting the gulfs of Cutch and Cambay, converts the state of Cutch into an island. In the dry season the soil is impregnated with salt, the surface in some places being moist and muddy, and in others like a dry river bed, or sea beach strewn with gravel and shingle. Opinions are varied as to the formation of the Rann and its character, its present condition being probably the result of some natural convulsion. The greater Rann to the north is about 160 miles from east to west, and 80 from north to south, and the little Rann to the east, 80 miles from east to west, and from ten to forty broad from north to south. Two artificial sheets of water, from their size, deserve a place among the lakes of the Presidency, these are Vehar in the neighbourhood of Bombay, and Karakwasla near Poona. The former situated about 16 miles distant from Bombay in a group of hills near Thana, supplies water to the city of Bombay, and has an area of 1,400 acres; the latter supplying water to Poona and irrigating the country in its neighbourhood, covers an area of 3,500 acres.

The wooded tract of country known as The Dangs, is a rough mountain region, lying between the table-land of the Khandesh district and the seaboard plains of Gujarat, this tract, with the district of Kanara in the south, is almost entirely devoted to the production of timber.

The whole Presidency is intersected with good roads which connect the principal towns and facilitate the transport of produce. An extensive Railway system is also being developed, Bombay being connected by railways with Madras, Nagpore, Calcutta, Rajputana and Hyderabad. The following lines of railway run through the Presidency, all of which are open for traffic:—The Great Indian Peninsula line from Bombay to Jubbulpore towards the north-east, and from Bombay to Madras towards the south-east, these lines diverging from Kalian Junction. The Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway from Bombay to Ahmedabad, and thence on to Wadhwan, with a branch striking off from Anand to Pali; the Kattywar State Railway from Wadhwan to Bhaunagar; the Patri State Railway from the Veramgam station on the Bombay, Baroda and Central India line, to Patri, and the Gaikhwar's line of Railway branching off from Miagam to Daboi. The Dhond and Manmad State Railway connecting with the northern and southern lines of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway at the stations from which the line is named. The Western Rajputana State Railway, starting towards the north from Ahmedabad station of the Bombay, Baroda and Central India line, and open for traffic up to Palanpur and Deesa. The Sind, Punjab and Delhi Railway from Kurrachee to Kotri, connecting with the Indus Valley State Railway line running from thence to Bahawalpur and Mooltan; while surveys of lines to connect the Sind Punjab and Delhi line with the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway, as well as for the extension of the Madras Railway from Bellary to Karwar viâ Hubli, with a branch to Goa, and from Wadhwan through the peninsula of Kattywar, have been completed. The Kandahar State Railway, from Ruk Station near Sukkur on the Indus Valley line, passing through Jacobabad and Sibi, to be eventually extended to Kandahar, a distance of about 400 miles from Ruk, with branches to Quetta, and to Pir Chauki at the foot of the Bolan pass, is now completed to about twenty miles beyond Sibi, the surveys for the remainder of the line to Kandahar being in progress.

In Sind, the Delta of the Indus is scored with numerous inundation canals, no less than 163 in number, and of a total length of 5,643 miles, irrigating an area of upwards of two million acres; twelve of these canals, of a length of 1,287 miles, lie on the right bank of the river, and one hundred and fifty-one, of a length of 4,356 miles, on the left bank. The chief of these canals are the Begari, 148 miles in length, and the Desert canal, 60 miles, in the Upper Sind Frontier district; the Sind canal, 67 miles, the Sakkar canal, 127 miles, the Deharwa, 45 miles, the Masuwah, 32 miles, the Maharowah, 37 miles, the Koraiwah, 23 miles, and the Arorwah, 21 miles, in the Shikarpur District; the Ghar canal, 283 miles, the Nara, 217 miles, the Wahur, 38 miles, the Mittrau, 141 miles and the Thar canal, 52 miles, in the Thar and Parkar district; the Hyderabad district canals, 1,760 miles; the Mehrab, 61 miles, the Nasrat, 72 miles, the Naolakhi, 137 miles, the Dambro, 58 miles, the Rhein, 141 miles, the Alibhar, 75 miles, the Great Marak, 212 miles, the Gharo, 267 miles, the Sarfraz, 102 miles, the Fulali, 994 miles, the Mulchand, 64 miles, and the Chandan, 24 miles; the Kurrachee district canals, 1,360 miles; the Western Nara, 37 miles, the Phitu, 27 miles, the Kalri, 136 miles, the Bagar, 125 miles, the Pinyari, 410 miles, the Satuh, 58 miles, and the Khantah, 70 miles. Other portions of the Presidency have irrigation channels of a smaller class, the chief of these are, the Tapti canal in Surat; the Panjhra and Jamda canals in Khandesh; the Palkhed and Wadali canals in Nasik; the Ojhar, the Lakh, the Mutha and Nira canals in Ahmednagar; the Rewari, the Yerla, the Gondauli and Krishna canals in Satara; the Gokak canal in Belgaum; the Hathmati and Sabarmati canals in Ahmedabad.

Climate and Sanataria.

In a territory extending through so many degrees of latitude, containing lowlands lying near the coast and elevated plateaux remote from the sea, while receiving in its more southern parts the full force of the south-west monsoon, extending northwards beyond its influence, great varieties of climate are met with. In Upper Sindh, the extreme dryness and heat, combined with the aridity of a sandy soil, make up a climate resembling that of the sultry deserts of Africa. The mean maximum temperature at Hyderabad in lower Sindh, during the six hottest months of the year, has been given at ninety-eight in the shade, while the water of the Indus reaches blood heat; in Upper Sind it is even hotter, the thermometer being known to register 130° in the shade. In Cutch and in Gujarat, the heat though less, is also very great. The Konkan is hot and moist, the fall of rain during the monsoon sometimes nearly approaching 300 inches. The table land of the Deccan above the Ghats on the contrary has a very agreeable climate, as has also the southern Maratha country, and in the hills of Mahableshwar,—where there is a sanitarium,—of Singarh and other detached heights, Europeans may go out at all hours with impunity. Bombay island itself, though in general cooled by the refreshing sea-breeze, is oppressively hot during May and October. The south-west monsoon generally sets in about the first week in June, and pours a prodigious quantity of rain along the coast, from June till October therefore travelling is difficult and unpleasant, except in Sind, where the monsoon rains exert no influence. The Sanataria of the Presidency will be found in the list of the military stations.

Staples and Manufactures.

Agriculture is the chief employment of the bulk of the population in this presidency. The ordinary natural productions are cotton, rice, the Indian millets, barley, pulses and grain of every kind, potatoes, sugar-cane, coffee, red-pepper, oil-seeds, turmeric and tobacco. Coal is found in Cutch, and indigo, hemp, jute and other fibres are produced in Sind and the Konkan.

The principal manufacture of the Presidency is that of cotton, for which there are now forty-two mills, and about 2,550 gins, chiefly in Bombay, Gujarat and Khandesh. In addition to the cotton mills, one jute and two silk mills are at work in Bombay, where Chinese silk workers have also begun to establish themselves and do a thriving business. Dyeing, tanning, working in metal, and the manufacture of indigo, sugar, paper, soap and glass are also carried on, but to a limited extent. In Sind, the chief manufacturing district of which is Hyderabad, blankets, carpets, rugs, leather work, gold and silver work, cutlery and ivory toys, are manufactured, while in the villages along the whole length of the coast, the fishermen cure and export large quantities of fish. Pottery is made everywhere for local consumption and use. The forests contain valuable timber, gums, drugs and dyes, also cocoanuts, from the kernel of which oil is largely extracted, and coir fibre from the outer husk. The Bombay box work made in Bombay and Surat, gives employment to several hundred workmen, carving in sandal wood, ebony and black-wood is also carried on. Though deficient in mineral wealth, the Presidency is abundantly supplied with stores of stone fitted for building and road making purposes. There are large limestone and slate quarries, and iron ore is mined and smelted in the Dharwar, Belgaum and Kurrachee districts, while the adjacent hills in Baluchistan near Kurrachee, are reported to produce a variety of minerals, such as gypsum, copper, lead, antimomy and sulphur.

Form of Administration.

The civil divisions of the Bombay Presidency comprise the regulation districts, with the non-regulation territories of the Panch Mahals in Gujarat, and the province of Sind. The Government is administered by a Governor and his Council. This body is the chief executive and legislative authority of the Presidency, which for administrative purposes is divided into four divisions, embracing (including Bombay) twenty-four districts, each division being placed under the control and superintendence of a Commissioner, and each district under a Collector and Magistrate subordinate to the Commissioner, the district officer being the chief unit of executive administration. Each district is again sub-divided for Revenue purposes into Talukas or sub-divisions, under Magisterial and Revenue officers subordinate to the district officers, these sub-divisional officers are styled Mamlatdars and Deputy Collectors. The Judicial organisation of the regulation districts is entrusted to a High Court, and in Sind to a Judicial Commissioner, assisted by District and Sessions Judges. Bombay like Calcutta has a special administration of its own, with a separate establishment of Police under control of a Commissioner, and courts for the administration of civil and criminal justice municipal matters and taxation within the town limits being entrusted to, and managed by a Chairman and Board of Justices specially appointed.

Census.

A general census was taken throughout the Presidency on the night of the 21st February 1872, giving a population of 16,199,144 souls in British territory, the average density for all the collectorates being 129 persons to the square mile, and varying from a maximum of 29,291 in Bombay city, to 14 in Thar and Parkar in Sind. Of the total population, Hindus constitute seventy-six per cent., Mahomedans seventeen per cent., Aborigines three and a half per cent., and the remainder, viz., Christians, Parsis, Buddhists and others, three and a half per cent. The proportion of males to females being fifty-two to forty-eight; more than three-fourths of the entire population are Hindus; their maximum number is in Satara, their minimum in the Upper Sind Frontier districts. The Mahomedans preponderate in Sind, and their minimum number is in the Panch Mahals district. Except in Sind, the Buddhists are widely scattered through all the Collectorates. The Christians are chiefly in Bombay city, Poona and Thana. The Indo-Portugese and Native Christians form nearly one-half of the entire Christian population. Two-thirds of the entire Parsi population is in Bombay city alone, and of the remaining third, one-half is in the city of Surat. The Aboriginal tribes are chiefly in the collectorates of Surat, Khandesh and Nasik.

THE FRENCH TERRITORIES.

VI.

THE PORTUGUESE TERRITORIES.

THE FRENCH TERRITORIES.

THE French territories in India consist of several detached portions, all subject to the jurisdiction of the Governor residing at Pondicherry, to whom the general government of these possessions is confitled. Their total area is 178 square miles, with a total population of 271,460 souls. The several settlements are as follow :—

IN BENGAL.

1. CHANDERNAGORE.—Area about three square miles or 2,330 acres. Latitude of town 22° 50′ N., Longitude 88° 23′ E. Distance from Calcutta seventeen miles north. The settlement of Chandernagore lies on the right bank of the Hooghly river in the district of Hooghly. The population numbers about 22,600. Chandernagore appears to have been in the occupation of the French as early as 1700, the year in which Calcutta first became a British settlement. Forty years later the settlement attained a high degree of opulence and splendour, which it retained until its capture by Clive in 1757. France recovered Chandernagore with the rest of her settlements in India, under the treaty with England of 1763. It was again taken by the British in 1793, and finally restored at the general peace of 1816. The principal production is opium.

IN MADRAS.

2. KARIKAL.—Area fifty-two square miles. Population 91,468. Latitude of town 10°53′N. Longitude 79° 57 ′E. Distance from Tanjore forty-seven miles north. This settlement lies within the district of Tanjore in the Madras Presidency, and is situated on the Coromandel Coast of the Bay of Bengal, on a small estuary of the river Cauvery. It has several large manufactories of cotton fabrics, and carries on an active trade in rice, which is its principal production. This territory was restored at the general peace of 1816, on the condition that no fortifications should be erected thereon, and no military retained, but such as may be required for purposes of police.

3. MAHE.—Area five square miles. Population 8,469. Latitude of town 11° 42′ N., Longitude 75°38′E. Distance from Tellicherry seven miles. A settlement on the coast within the district of Malabar of the Madras Presidency, and situated on the south side of the estuary of a small river flowing from the Western Ghats, and navigable for boats a considerable distance inland. This place was taken by the British in 1793, and restored to the French at the general peace of 1815. The Carmelites have a church and a missionary establishment here.

4. YANAON or YANAN.—Area five square miles or 3,147 acres. Population 5,460. Latitude of town 16°44′ N., Longitude 82°16′ E. A settlement within the Godavari district of the Presidency of Madras, and situated near the bifurcation of the Godavari river, and the river of Coringa, and about nine miles above the embouchure of the former. The Coringa river has a deep channel which admits of vessels of 200 tons burthen proceeding as high as Yanaon. This territory stretches along the banks of the two rivers for a distance of six miles.

5. PONDICHERRY.—Area 113 square miles. Population 143,500. Latitude of town 11° 53′N., Longitude 79° 56′ E. This territory consists of, first, the district of Pondicherry proper, containing, besides the town, eleven villages ; second, the district of Vallanor of forty-five villages ; third, the district of Bahour of thirty-six villages. The chief exports are fine blue cottons and cotton yarn. The settlement is included in the district of South Arcot of the Madras Presidency, and is situated on the Coromandel Coast of the Bay of Bengal, at the mouth of a small river capable of admitting only coasting craft of small burthen. The Governor of Pondicherry rules over the whole of the French settlements in India. The town is pleasantly situated and healthy, and contains a population of about 40,000, and is distant from Madras about eighty-six miles south. It is connected by Railway with Madras. Pondicherry being the principal seat of Government for all the French settlements in India and Indo-China, matters of importance are negociated through the Collector of South Arcot. Minor matters, however, at the outlying stations of Karikal, Yanaon and Mahe are dealt with by the Collectors at those places without reference to Pondicherry.

THE PORTUGUESE TERRITORIES.

THE only settlements now left to the Portuguese, of all the vast territories which were once under their rule and influence in India, are Goa, Daman and Diu, containing a total area of 1,096 square miles, and a population of about 407,700 souls. The following description of these places will suffice :—

1. GOA.—Area, 1,062 square miles. Population, 363,780. Revenue, Rs. 7,20,000. Military force, about 3,000. The territory of Goa lies on the western or Malabar coast of India in the Bombay Presidency, and is bounded on the north by the native state of Sawant Wari, on the east by the districts of Belgaum and north Canara, and on the west by the Indian Ocean. The Principality is about sixty-four miles in length from north to south, and twenty in breadth from east to west. Two-thirds of the population are stated to be Christians of the Roman Catholic persuasion. The settlement is divided into two districts, Salsette and Bardes, which are again subdivided into parishes, the largest of which is Pangaum or Panjim, containing the present seat of Government. The new town, Panjim, or Villa Nova de Goa, containing about 20,000 souls, chiefly of Portuguese descent, is situated at the entrance of the harbour, and is defended by several fortresses, one of which, called Algoada, stands close to the shore, on the point forming the north extremity of the bay. The harbour, formed by an arm of the sea into which flows a small river, is distant about five miles from the old city of Goa, which is now almost entirely deserted. It is connected with the new city by a stone causeway about 300 yards long. Old Goa contains many fine buildings, churches and monasteries, but it is fast becoming a mass of deserted ruins. The inhabitants are almost entirely ecclesiastics. The chief products of the territory are rice, only in sufficient quantity for the consumption of the inhabitants, hemp, pepper, cocoanut, betel-nut, and salt, which latter article is manufactured to a very large extent. The territory is well-watered, fertile, and in most places well cultivated, Latitude of new town 15° 29′ N. Longitude 73° 53′ E. Distance from Bombay 260 miles.

2. DAMAN.—Area twenty-two square miles. Population 33,160. The district of Daman, in the Thana district of the Bombay Presidency, is about seven miles in length from north to south, and four in breadth. The capital or town of Daman is situated on the Damanganga, or river of Daman which rises in the Western Ghats, or about 40 miles further east, and is fortified, having a rampart with ten bastions and two gateways. The fort is called the castle of St. Hiaronymus. Daman is an excellent place for small vessels to remain at during the south-west monsoon and for the purpose of repair, the country being well-stocked with ship timber. Provisions and vegetables are cheap and plentiful. Daman was sacked and burned by the Portuguese in 1531, it was subsequently rebuilt and taken by the Portuguese in 1558, since which time it has remained one of their possessions. Latitude of the town 20° 21′ N., Longitude 72° 53′ E. Distance from Bombay 101 miles.

3. DIU.—Area twelve square miles. Population 10,765. Latitude of town 20° 42′ N., Longitude 71° 1′ E. Distance from Bombay 170 miles. Diu is an island on the south coast of the peninsula of Kattywar, in the Gujarat province of the Bombay Presidency. The Portuguese obtained possession of the place in 1515. The town is situated at the eastern extremity of the island which extends from east to west about seven miles, and north to south about two miles. The soil of the island being itself little productive, vegetables and other provisions are brought from the mainland. The channel between the island and mainland is navigable only for fishing boats and other small craft, the western entrance, which is defended by a fort, having four or five feet of water on the bar when lowest. The town is well fortified, being surrounded by a wall strengthened with towers at regular intervals. Notwithstanding the excellence of the harbour for ships of moderate draught, there is but little traffic. Diu head, two miles to the westward of the west end of Diu island, has on its east side, a small harbour where vessels might lie sheltered from the westerly winds, in from two to three and a half fathoms.

BRIEF GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

AFGHANISTAN—This so-called country extends from the Punjab on the east, to Persia on the west, and stretches down from the Amu Daria or Oxus river on the north, to the frontier of Baluchistan on the south. On the north, the boundary of the country as known to us at the present day, runs along the river Oxus or Amu Daria, (called also Ab-i-Panjah at its head) from lake Victoria (Sir-i-Kul) at its source in the great Pamir plateau, to Khoja Saleh, here leaving the river with a slight southerly curve, it goes across the Dasht-i-Chul desert to Robat Abdula Khan on the Murghab river, and thence on to Sarakhs on the Hari-Rud or Tajend river, where it touches the Persian frontier. On the west, starting from Sarakhs, the boundary follows the course of the Hari-Rud to a point near the village of Toman Aga, where it leaves that river and runs due south for about eighty miles, and then follows a straight course to the Cha Sagak pass (3,800 feet above sea level), from thence it turns off in a south-easterly direction for about twenty miles, and then runs due south to a point about five miles east of the village of Bandan in Persian territory, from thence it again turns in a south-easterly direction, passing through the Hamun swamp to the river Helmand, which marks its course for about thirty miles up to the town of Kuhak, whence it turns off in a direct south-westerly course to the peak of Kuh-Malik-i-Siyah, its extreme south-western limit. The southern boundary touching on Baluchistan is not so definite, but may be said to run through the sandy desert, along, or in the vicinity of, the parallel of 30°, up to within thirty or forty miles of Quetta, whence it turns in a north-easterly direction, beyond which it is for the present unknown. The eastern boundary has always been considered conterminous with the British line of the Punjab frontier. The extreme north-eastern limits up to lake Victoria, are entirely unknown. It may be as well to mention here, that the country along the eastern frontier of Afghanistan, between the Punjab and the Koh Jadran or Kohnak range of hills on the west (sometimes called the Western Suliman range), and northward up to the Kuram valley, contains numerous tribes who do not, and it is believed never did, own allegiance to the sovereign of Kabul. The whole drainage of this part of the country containing these independent tribes, flows into the Indus. In the extreme north-east direction also, in the country to the east of the Kunar and Chitral valleys, there exist tribes and states more or less independent, and who it is believed have always disclaimed the authority of the ruler of Kabul, excluding these independent portions, the remainder of the country of Afghanistan includes the whole drainage of the Kabul river up to British territory, the whole drainage of the Helmand river, the whole drainage to the Hamun swamp from the north, the whole eastern drainage of the Hari-Rud, and the country drained by the Murghab south of the supposed north-western boundary, as well as the country drained by the southern tributaries of the Oxus, viz., the Sangalak, the Sar-i-pul, the Balkh, the Khulm, the Kunduz, the Aksarai, and the Vardoj streams. The Oxus is navigable to Khoja Saleh, and it is believed that it will prove to be quite navigable up to its confluence with the Kafirnahan near Khulm and Kunduz* The drainage of the Helmund and its tributaries the Arghandab and the Tarnak, is lost in swamps on the west, and on the north the Murghab and Hari-Rud flow into the Kara Kum desert north-west of Merv or Naukala and disappear there, being absorbed into the soil.

The Kabul river, a tributary of the Indus, after a course of about 250 miles falls into the Indus at Attock. The principal feeders of this river are the Swat, Lendai, Kunar or Chitral, Alingar, Alishang, Tagao, Nijrao, Panjshir and Ghorband from the north; the Logar, Tezin, Surkhab, Bara, and Tirah from the south. The other minor rivers of the country are the Farah-Rud, Lora, Kuram, Gomal, Shahband and Arghesan. The Hamun swamp above alluded to is situated in the province of Sistan on the south-west border of Afghanistan, it is about seventy miles in length and about twenty-five miles in breadth, with a depth of from three to four feet ; there is another lagoon called Ab-Istada, sixty miles south-west of Ghazni, about twelve miles in breadth, and four feet in depth ; the water of both these lagoons is salt.

* From fort Petro Alexandrofsk to Charjui, the distance of 295 miles was steamed in 7½ days inclusive of stoppages. From Charjui to Khoja Saleh, 170 miles, was reached by steamer in 8 days. The whole downward trip to fort Petro Alexandrofsk from Khoja Saleh was performed in 10 days by the same steamer.

The area of the whole territory is about 300,000 square miles. It includes a succession of ridges and valleys, the latter being irregular, and the ridges occasionally rising into lofty mountains or expanding into plateaux. Starting from the Karambar and Baroghil passes on the extreme north-east, at the head of the Chitral or Kashkar valley, Afghanistan is traversed by several lofty ranges of mountains, viz., the Hindu Kush range terminating at the Haji Khak pass, the Koh-i-Baba range, the Siah Koh (black mountains,) the Safed Koh (white mountains,) the Tirband-i-Turkestan, the Koh-Jadran or Kohnak (the Western Sulimans,) and the Eastern Suliman range. The highest summits are in the Hindu Kush range in the north, which sometimes exceed 20,000 feet, many of the passes across the hills being more than 10,000 feet. These mountains are the great water partings between the basins of the Indus, the Oxus, the Murghab, the Hari-Rud, the Helmand and its tributaries, the Arghandab and the Tarnak.

Although by far the greater portion of Afghanistan is a region of desert, rocks and inaccessible mountains, it is however, interspersed with several well-watered and fertile valleys, yielding all the ordinary crops and the finest fruits and vegetables in abundance. In the forests, there are many of the trees common in Europe, and some others peculiar. The asafœtida plant grows in great luxuriance, and the Pine flourishes on the mountain sides up to a height of 10,000 feet, while Oak, Walnut, Birch and other trees grow at lower altitudes. In many parts, the climate brings to perfection many tropical productions. The valley of the Kabul river appears to be the most important part of the country ; to the south is the fertile district of Logar, drained by the river of that name, a tributary of the Kabul ; to the north is the Koh-i-daman, also fertile and highly cultivated, and to the east is the valley of Jellalabad. There is also an exceedingly rich and level tract in the vicinity of Herat and Kandahar.

The mineral wealth of the country is considerable, silver, mercury, copper, antimony iron, lead and zinc, are all present, some in abundance, while gold is found in many places. There are indications of coal also.

The principal marts of the country are Kabul, Kandahar and Herat, and a considerable foreign trade with India, Persia, Chinese Turkistan, Bokhara and Baluchistan is carried on. The manufactures are unimportant, consisting chiefly of shawls and other woollen fabrics, which last are seldom exported. The whole commerce and carrying trade of Afghanistan is carried on by the Lohanis, (Povindahs) a pastoral tribe of Afghans who occupy the country eastward between the Western Sulimans and the Indus.

The climate of Afghanistan, though varying greatly in different parts, is on the whole characterised by dryness and great extremes of temperature. In Cabul and Ghazni the cold is intense and snow lies on the ground for three months in the winter. Even in a latitude lower than that of Spain or Italy, the severity of a Russian winter is endured. In Jellalabad, however, where the elevation is nearly 2,000 feet above the sea, the winter is as mild as in Hindustan. The heat of summer is everywhere great, and in some places higher than in Bengal. At Kabul 6,500 feet above the sea, the thermometer ranges from 90° to 100°, in Kandahar it is even higher.

Afghanistan is not a homogeneous state, peopled entirely by Afghans under the rule of one sovereign. It is merely a geographical expression like Turkey, and contains some districts almost entirely Afghan, many in which the Afghans form part of a mixed population, like the Turks or Greeks in Bulgaria or Roumelia, others in which the Afghan soldiery rule by force an alien race, and also large tracts in which the Afghans have never penetrated, and in which their language is utterly unknown. About three-fourths of the districts which are principally inhabited by Afghans, and which therefore may be called Afghanistan, seem to lie within the tract to which we now give this name, the remainder being in the independent portions above alluded to. The numbers which follow are of course only approximate, but in the absence of better information they must answer for the present.

Excluding the independent territory, the total number of inhabitants may be taken as 5,000,000, and of these perhaps one and three quarter million are true Afghans, who are however, in a similar position to the Turks in the Ottoman empire, and like them generally armed and trained for war, the remainder are Pathans proper and non-Afghans, generally traders and agriculturists. To take the Afghans in the order of their relative importance we have first the Kizilbashes, descendants it is said of military colonies left by Nadir Shah when he overran the country. They are modern Persians of mixed Persian and Turkish descent, numbering about 150,000, but from their courage, wealth and enterprise, of far more consequence than a much larger number of any other race in the country. They occupy a large and wealthy quarter of the city of Kabul, and fill important posts in the civil administration of the country; they are bold and skilful horsemen, intelligent, orderly and amenable to discipline. In religion they are Mahomedans of the Shiah persuasion and speak Persian.

Allied to the Kizilbashes in language are the Tajiks supposed to represent the original Persian inhabitant of the land. They number about half a milion. The large tract of hilly country extending from the Koh-i-Baba near Kabul, to Herat, and nearly down to Zamindawar on the south, is called Hazara. This portion has always been almost entirely independent of the ruler of Kabul, and no Afghan can pass through it. The more accessible of the Hazara districts, betweet Girishk and Herat, only from fear of the Kabul armies pay the Amir tribute. It is occupied by tribes of Tartar origin called Hazaras, and towards the south-west, Aimaks, and number some 400,000, they are chiefly a pastoral people dwelling in secluded villages, or wandering over the hills and living on the produce of their flocks and herds, and retaining in many places their ancient customs and habits unchanged since they came from the highlands beyond the Oxus. The majority speak Persian and profess the Shiah Mahomedan faith.

Passing into Afghan-Turkistan, which comprises the districts between the Oxus and the Hindu-Kush, Koh-i-Baba and the Tirband-i-Turkistan mountains, from the Murghab to the Pamirs, i.e., the Khanates of Maimana, Shibarghan Balkh, Khulm, Kunduz, Badakshan and Wakhan, we find the ruling race to be Ozbegs, who in some parts form the bulk of the population. In Badakshan, Wakhan and other remote places, the populace is still Tajik or remnants of the aboriginal races, and the Afghans have only occasionaly appeared as invaders and plunderers, but the memory of their presence is generally sufficient to enforce the payment of a tribute to Kabul. The Ozbegs, Tajiks and other inhabitants of this country are estimated at about 640,000; the Ozbegs being originally intruders who crossed the Oxus and subdued the Tajiks, to be themselves conquered in turn by the Afghans.

Separated from Afghan-Turkistan by the Hindu Kush, are a number of valleys mostly well-watered and fertile, running generally from the mountain range to the Kabul river. To the west and north of Kabul, the spurs and valleys are inhabited by the Kohistanis or mountaineers, wild tribes of perhaps mixed origin, turbulent and treacherous, nominally subject to Kabul, but ever ready to take advantage of a weak Government. East of these and extending to the snows of the Hindu Kush is Kafiristan inhabited by a fair, interesting and somewhat mysterious people, called the Siahposh Kafirs (black clothed unbelievers), who seem to be one of the earliest offshoots of the Aryan race, or more correctly speaking perhaps part of the original stock itself, who have remained for ages in or near their original home. Few Europeans have seen any of this curious race. They themselves claim descent from Alexander the Great, and it is possible that some of the Græco Bactrians, when driven from the cities in the valley of the Kabul river, may have sought refuge in this almost inaccessible region, and have been absorbed by the old population. The Kafirs have some distinctively European customs, as sitting on chairs and using tables. Up to the present time they have resisted all the attempts of the Afghans to subdue and convert them to Mahomedanism, though those who live on the borders have had to submit, and are called "Nimchas," which may be taken to mean half Mahomedans. In numbers the Kafirs with Nimchas and Chitralis are thought to be about 150,000.

To the east of Kafiristan are the Kunar, Bajaur and Swat hill-men, apparently not of Afghan origin, but Afghan in language and other respects. Like their neighbours the Momands, they take little interest in Kabul politics and care only to preserve their own independence. East and south of these again are the Yusufzaies, one of the principal Afghan clans, who live partly in a state of independence and partly in British territory.

If we now turn to the west we shall find in the sandy wastes of Sistan, nomads of various races and wild freebooters in a state of anarchy and misrule. North of Sistan, the western frontier is formed by the important province of Herat, where the population is purely Persian, the rulers and garrison only being Afghans. Of the Afghans themselves there may be between one and a half and two millions in Afghanistan, speaking for the most part their peculiar language Pushtu, of the same family as Sanskrit, though essentially distinct, and being Mahomedans of the Sunni persuasion. They are divided into clans, as the Momands, Ghilzais, Afridis, Duranis, &c., each of these being again subdivided into many smaller tribes.

Afghanistan in fact may be compared to the Turkey of fifty years ago; the Afghans representing the Mahomedans, the Kizilbashes and Tajiks being likened to the Greeks and Armenians, and the independent Kafirs and Hazaras to the Montinegrins and Servians.

The chief towns of Afghanistan are Kabul, Ghazni, Kelat-i-Ghilzai, Herat, Kandahar, Balkh, Khulm, Khanabad, Indarab, Khinjan, Narin, Takhtapul, Andhkui, Sar-i-pul, Meruchak Kunduz, Maimana, Jellalabad, Chitral, Dir, Girishk, Bamian, Shibarghan, Faizabad, Sabzawar, Pishin, Lash, Jowain, Farah, Khash and Ghurian.

Afghanistan communicates with India by various passes, the chief of which are the Khaibar commencing near Peshawar and extending through hills about thirty miles to the plains of Jellalabad; the Shutargardan, viâ the Kuram valley, and the Jagdallak pass through which the road from Jellalabad to Kabul viâ Gandamak passes. Several other passes also lead into Afghanistan across the Eastern Suliman range from the Derajat of the Punjab, through which the Povindahs or trading class of Afghans convey their goods, the chief of these are the Sakhi Sarwar, the Chachar, the Ghuleri or Gomal, the Draban, the Shangar, the Kaura and the Vihova. There are several passes over the Hindu-Kush range into Afghan Turkistan, of most of which very little is known beyond the names, the principal are, the Baroghil pass (12,000 feet) leading into Wakhan from Chitral; the Dora (16,000 feet), the Khartaza, the Nuksan (17,000 feet), the Agram, the Ishtirak, the Anjuman, the Khawak (13,200 feet), the Bazarak, the Parwan, the Salanlang (12,000 feet), the Kushan, the Gwalan, the Gwazyar, the Chardarya, the Ghalalaj, the Faringal, the Hajikak (12,000 feet), the Una, and the Shibr. The whole of the passes are free from snow about the end of June, but the most elevated peaks continue covered throughout the year. An extension of the railway from Peshawar to Kabul has been mentioned, to follow the course of the Kabul river, but it is doubtful whether a line could be carried along that route, or if it can be constructed at all in that direction. The Railway to Kandahar has already been referred to under 'Bombay Presidency.'

The capital, Kabul, 6,500 feet above sea level, is encompassed by hills on three sides, and is situated in a gorge where the Kabul river breaks through a range or spur from the Paghman hills. The modern city with its suburbs is extensive, and reaches across to the north bank of the river. On the east side is the fortress of Bala Hissar on a rocky height. The population is about 75,000.

AFGHAN ETHNOLOGY.

A paper by Mr. A. H. Keane, published in "Nature."

DURING the empire of the Sassanides, the whole of the region, from Persia proper to the right bank of the Indus, and from the Koh-i-Baba, Ghor and other western continuations of the Hindu-Kush to the Arabian Sea, was known as Khorasan, that is. Khoristan, the Land of the Sun, or the East. This term, with the gradual reduction of the Persian sway, has shrunk to the proportion of a province on the north-eastern frontier of Persia, and has been replaced further east by the ethnical expressions Afghanistan and Baluchistan, the lands of the Afghans and Baluchis. But these expressions, as so frequently happens, are so far misnomers and deceiving, that the lands in question harbour many other peoples besides those from whom they are now named. In Balochistan, for instance, the most numerous, powerful, and influential element is not the Baloch at all, but the still unfathomed Brahûi, from which circumstance it has even been suggested that the country ought rather to be called Brahuistan. A similar suggestion could not certainly well be made with regard to Afghanistan, for here there is no other people who can for a moment compare with the Afghans and Pathans in numbers, or political importance. Still the subjoined rough estimate of the population, according to nationalities, will show that it is very far from being homogeneous :—

Afghans and Pathâns	...	Iranian stock	3,520,000
Tajiks	...	Iranian stock	1,000,000
Hindkis	...	Hindu Stock	500,000
Hazaras and Aimaks	...	Mongolo-Târtar stock	600,000
Kataghâns	...	Tûrki stock	200,000
Badakshis	...	Galcha stock	100,000
Balochis	...	Iranian stock	100,000
Kizil-Bashes	...	Tûrki stock	75,000
Kohistanis and Siah Posh	...	Galcha stock	50,000
			6,145,000 *

It will be noticed that in this table are included all the races forming part of the present Afghan political system taken in its widest sense, whose northern frontier is now marked by the upper course of the Oxus. Before dealing with the Afghans proper, with whom we are chiefly concerned, a few words may be devoted to each of the minor elements, all of whom continue to keep aloof from their neighbours, seldom or never intermarrying, and mostly retaining their own national customs, dress, religion, and speech. No general amalgamation has, in fact, yet taken place of these heterogeneous ingredients, so that we cannot speak of the Afghan in the same sense as we do of, for instance, the Italian, French, or English nations. The Afghan race, though by far the most numerous, has been politically predominant only since the death of Nadir Shah (1747), and its rule has been far too checquered by intestine strife and foreign troubles, to have allowed time or opportunity for the slow process of absorption to have made any perceptible progress. Next to them by far the most important are—

The Tajiks, who, here as elsewhere in Central Asia, represent the old civilised Iranian communities, co-extensive with the former limits of the Persian empire, but since the ascendency of the Tûrki, Mughal, Afghan, and Brahui races, now forming politically the subject, socially the settled, trading, and agricultural elements in these regions. Persian, or some variety of it, is still every where their mother-tongue ; hence, in Afghanistan they are collectively known either as Parsivân, i.e., Persian-speaking, or Dehgân, i.e., peasants or agriculturists. "The Tajiks are Iranians, a remnant of the old Persian population subdued by the Afghans, but still speaking Persian and retaining the Persian type of features." (F. von Stein, in Petermann's Mittheilungen for March, 1879); religion, Sunnite. Remotely allied to them are—

The Hindkis, of Hindu stock, who have been long settled here chiefly as traders, forming numerous communities, especially in the eastern districts, said to be mostly of the Shatri caste; religion Brahminical, speech Hindustani.

The Hazaras and Aimaks, occupying the northern highlands between Bamian and Herat, the former in the east, the latter in the west, are undoubtedly of Mongolo-Târtar stock, though now speaking rude Persian dialects. They claim descent, some from the Toghiani Tûrks, some from the Koreish Arabs, others from the old Kibti race, but seem really to be military colonists settled here by Jinghis Khân, Manku Khân, and Timur. The Aimaks (the term simply means horde, tribe, clan), are of the Sunni, the Hazaras of the Shiah sect, and are consequently fiercely opposed to each other. Owing to this circumstance they have often been regarded as of different races, but "there seems no reason to doubt that the Aimaks and Hazaras are the same people. though separated...by the different sects they have adopted" (Col. C. M. MacGregor, "Afghanistan," p. 246) ; type, high cheek bones, with small grey eyes,

* This figure exceeds by about a million that usually given as the total population of Afghanistan. But recent exploration has shown that many of the tribes are much more numerous than had been supposed, and as our knowledge of the country increases, it will probably be found to contain even a greater population than that here given.

scant beard, and low stature. The Aimaks occupy the Ghôr highlands, which must have been almost uninhabited when they settled there, for we read in the National Chronicle that about 1190 A.D., Sultan Shêhab-ud-dîn removed all the Afghan tribes from the Ghôr to the Ghazni highlands, "in order to become the bulwarks of the seat of empire and hold in awe the infidels of Hindustan." Of the Aimaks there are four main divisions, the so-called "Char Aimak" ("Four Hordes"): Taemûris, Taemûnis, Hazara-Zeidnats, and Suris, with a total population, according to some authorities, of about 450,000, including those now settled in Khorasan. The Hazaras, numbering at least 150,000, occupy the region stretching for 250 miles west from Kâbulistan, and are divided into thirty-eight main branches with numerous subdivisions, under chiefs bearing various titles, such as Khan, Sultan, Ikhtiar, Valî, Mîr, Mettar, and Tukhar, and hitherto practically independent of the Durâni Amîrs. Akin to them are—

The Kataghans, a main branch of the Uzbegs, forming the bulk of the population in Kunduz and Balkh, that is, the region now known as Afghan Turkestan, stretching from the northern slopes of the Hindu-Kûsh to the left bank of the Upper Oxus. They take their name from a legendary Kata, from whom they claim descent in two main streams, the Beth-bula and Cheguna, with five and eleven sub-divisions respectively, each named after one of Kata's sixteen sons. Most of the tribes occupy the country south of the Oxus, but 7,000 families are now settled north of that river, in Bokhara territory; religion Sunnite, speech Tûrki; type, small stature, broad face, high cheek bones, sparse beard, small oblique eyes; are now mostly settled agriculturists and traders.

The Badakhshis, or natives of Badakhshan, in the extreme north-east, beyond Kunduz and abutting on the Pamir table-land, are a pure Aryan race, intermediate between the Iranians and Hindus, and of the same stock as the highland Tajiks, whom Ch. de Ujfalvy groups under the collective name of Galchas. Chief divisions, Darwazi, Roshâni, Shugnâni, and Wakhi, or Wakhâni; religion Sunnite, speech Aryan, with Persian and Indian affinities. The Wakhi is a distinct variety, retaining many old Sanskritic elements, hence R. Shaw thinks it may be a relic of a primitive organic Aryan language current here before the race issued from the Pamir, or divided into Vedic and Zendic. It would be interesting to compare it with the Jagnôb, which Ch. de Ujfalvy tells us is unintelligible to the other Galcha tribes of Ferghâna. A Galcha skull which has found its way to Paris, has been examined by P. Topinard, who pronounces it to be identical with those of the early Keltic Aryans. If their speech also should prove to be of an organic Aryan type, as constituted previous to the dispersion, Ch. de Ujfalvy's view might be unreservedly accepted that "Ces pays mystérieux recèlent sans le secret de l'origine de notre race.',

The Balochis, of Iranian stock, and regarded by the Afghans as their brethren, are represented in Afghanistan chiefly by a number of hill tribes in the south-east corner, and by some nomads in the south and west along the Lower Helmand. Most of them belong to the Rind section of the Baloch race, the more important being the—

Kasrânis and Bozdars, on north-west border of Dera Ghazi Khan: numerous sub-divisions, the Bozdars alone with sixty-four septs (Major Minchin).

Khosahs, south of Sanghar Pass towards Shikarpur; four divisions: Kalulani, Bakiani, Toniani, Sariani.

Laghâris, overlooking the Sakhi-Sarwar Pass, Dera Ghazi Khan frontier; four divisions: Aliani, Hadiani, Boglani, Habtiani; fifty-six sub-divisions.

Gurchânis, south of the Laghâris, about Chachar Pass.

Maris, Sham district, east, north, and north-west of Kachi; four divisions: Ghazani, Loharani, Bijarani, Mazarani; twenty-two sub-divisions. The Mazarani have separated from the rest, and are now settled west of Sibî and north of the Bolan Pass.

Bûgtis, south of the Maris; two divisions: Firozani, Zarkâni; thirteen sub-divisions.

Kayânis, Sistân, former rulers of that country; by some said not to be Balochis, but Kâkar Afghans.

Religion, Sunnite; speech, a rude, uncultivated variety of the old Persian; type, regular Caucasian features, light or brown complexion; hair often chestnut and even fair; eyes light grey and sometimes blue, especially in centre and north. Of the many forms of the national name, Baloch, Biloch, Belûch, Balûch, Bilûch, &c., Baloch is the best, coming nearest to the true pronunciation, as Pottinger assured his French translator, M. Eyriès.

The Kizl-Bashes, or "Red Heads," known collectively as Gholam-Khani or Gholam-i-Shah, "servants of the King," are of Tûrki stock, and have been settled in Herat, and the Gulkoh mountains, but chiefly in Kâbul since the time of Nadir Shah. The term was originally applied by Shah Ismaîl to the Nikâlu, Jawânsher, and four other trusty Tûrki tribes to whom he owed his successes. But since then they have become a sort of brotherhood "much akin to the Beyyadîyah or 'White Boys' of Oman, and bearing some analogy to the Mormons" (W. G. Palgrave, "Report on Province Trebizond," 1868). Those of Kâbul form three divisions: the Jawânsher, originally from Shîsha; the Afshar, Nadir Shah's tribe, and the Morâd Khani, composed of all the other Tûrkis who have from time to time removed from Persia to Kâbul; religion, Shiah, with secret rites; speech, Persian, and amongst themselves, Tûrki; are a very fine race, very fair, with an evident mixture of Iranian and Tartar blood.

The Kohistanis and Siah Posh ("Highlanders" and "Black Clothes") forming the bulk of the population in Kohistan, Swat, Kafiristan, Chitral, and generally of the southern slopes of the Hindu-Kûsh down to the left bank of the Kâbul river, are of pure Aryan stock, allied to the Kashmirians, but probably more closely to the Badakhshis and Wakhis. The Kohistanis are Moslem, the Siah Posh still mostly pagans, hence called Kâfirs, or Infidels, by their neighbours, and their country Kafiristan. Their speech, of which there are ten distinct varieties (Major Tanner), is described as neo-Sanskritic, akin to Dardu and Lughmâni. But it has never been critically studied, and may possibly prove to be pre-rather than neo-Sanskritic; is in any case of great philological interest, having been isolated from the kindred tongues since the eruption of Islâm in the tenth century; type, regular features, blue and dark eyes. hair varying from light brown to black, broad open forehead, tall and well-made. But General A. Abbot ("Correspondence," edited by C. R. Low, 1879) distinguishes between a fair type with blue eyes, the aristocracy "descended of the Greeks"(?) and a very dark type, the aborigines. The Kohistanis north and north-west of Kâbul, C. R. Markham says, are mainly Tajiks (Proc, Geo. Soc., February 2, 1879, p. 117); but they are more probably of the kindred Galcha stock, for those of Swat are represented as closely akin to the Siah Posh, whom I take to be of this race. They form two main sections, the Torwals and Garwis. They have taken a large share in the recent events about Kâbul. The Safis, who have also lately been heard of in the same neighbourhood, are simply Siah Posh converts of the Tagao valley, Kunar district, north of Kâbul; three divisions: Wadin, Gorbaz, and Mûsawîd; speech Pashae, closely allied to Lughmâni and Kohistani of Swat.

We come now to the Afghans proper, whose original home seems to have been the Kâbul valley, whence they spread westwards to the Ghôr country, southwards to the Sulimân mountains, and more recently down the Helmand and Arghandâb valleys to Kandahar.* They call themselves Bani-Israel, "Sons of Israel," claiming descent either from Saul or from the ten tribes, for on this point they do not seem to be quite clear. But this is of the less consequence that both claims are alike inadmissible. Notwithstanding a certain Jewish expression, which they have in common with the Armenians and other races of the Iranian plateau, they are beyond all doubt an Aryan and not a Semitic race, so far as these terms can be at all used as racial rather than linguistic designations. And here it may be well to remember that both Aryan and Semite belong equally to one ethnical stock, conventionally known to anthropologists as the Caucasian or Mediterranean, and that they can often be distinguished one from the other only by the test of language. We have the same phenomenon in Europe, where but for their speech, no one would even suspect that the Basques of the western Pyrenees were other than a somewhat favourable specimen of the Aryan race. This test, however, is abundantly sufficient to sever them from that connection, and the same test must suffice to remove the Afghans from the Semitic to the Aryan group.

* Till the time of Sultan Babar, founder of the Mugal empire (beginning of sixteenth century), the Afghan language was still confined to the north-eastern and western highlands, Persian elsewhere current, as it still is mostly in the lowlands.

Their most general and apparently oldest national name is Pukhtûn or Pakhtûn, as it is pronounced by the Khaibarîs, and which has been identified with the πάκτυες, of whom Herodotus heard through Scylax (509 B.C.) as situated about the junction of the Kôphes (Kâbul) and Indus. Their country they still call Pukhtûn-khwa, which is equivalent to Watan-khwa, or "Home Land"; their language is always called by them the Pukhtû, softened in the west to Pushtû, and from Pakhtâna, the plural of Pakhtûn, comes the form Pathân, by which they are known throughout India. This word has been connected with the root Pukhta, a hill, so that Pukhtun would mean Highlander. But such derivations are seldom trustworthy, and it may be questioned whether any people have ever called themselves Hill-men, though often enough so named by their neighbours.

The alternative national name, Afghân, by which they are exclusively known in Persia and Europe, has been regarded by some as synonymous with Pukhtûn, both meaning "set free;" but by others it has been connected with Açvakan, the Açvaka, or "Horsemen," of the Mahâbhârata, who are supposed to be the Assakani, or Assekenes, of the later Greek historians. The natives themselves draw a distinction between the two names, so that although all Afghans are Pukhtâna, not all Pukhtâna are true Afghans. The latter term is properly restricted to the descendants of a legendary Kais, one of the first apostles of Islâm (ob. 662), from whom, through his three sons, Sarabân, Batân, and Gurgûsht, are supposed to spring the 277 Afghan khels (tribes) proper. Of non-Afghan khels there are reckoned 128, making 405 Pukhtâna khels altogether. Of these 105 are Sarabâni (from Sarabân), 77 from Batân, in two divisions; Batanai 25, and Matti 25, these last being known as Ghilzae; 223 from Gurgûsht, also in two divisions; Gurgûshtai 95, and Karalânai 128, these last being the non-Afghan or Pukhtâna khels as above. The true Afghans occupy mainly the western, central, and north-eastern districts—Herat, Sistân, Kandahar, and the Kâbul basin, as far east as Peshâwar. The non-Afghans, or Pathâns proper, are found almost exclusively in the Sufed-Koh and Sulimân highlands, as far south as the Kaura or Vahova Pass, opposite Dera Fateh Khan. A line drawn from about the paralled of Mooltan, through this point, westwards to Thal through the middle of the Derajât, will very nearly form the boundary in this direction of the Pathâns on the north, and the Balochis and Brahuis on the south. This relative geographical area suggests a possible explanation of the distinction between the two great divisions of the race. From their more westerly position it is obvious that the true Afghans must have been the first to adopt Islâm, and they may have thus come to look upon their pagan brethren of the Sulimân highlands as Kâfirs, undeserving to rank as genuine Afghans, the distinction thus originated naturally surviving their subsequent conversion.

In the subjoined table an attempt is made to give, for probably the first time, a complete classification of all the main sections of both divisions, with their chief sub-branches, approximate number of khels, geographical area, and population.

Table of Afghan and Pathan Tribes.

Main Sections.	Total No. of Khels.	Population.	Chief Subdivisions.	Geographical Position.
1. Durani or Abdali ..	135	800,000	1. Zirak:—Popalzae, Alikiozae, Barakzae. 2. Panjpao:—Murzae, Alizae, Ishakzae.	Mainly in the tract between Herat and Kandahar, 400 miles long, 80 to 150 broad; also in Kabulistan.
2. Khugiani ..	32	50,000	Vaziri; Khairbûn; Sherzad ..	Chiefly in the Jalalabad district, between Surkh-ab and Kabul rivers. Seem to have been originally a branch of the Panjpao Duranis.
3. Ghilzae or Ghilji ..	140	600,000	1. Turan:—Ohtak, Sakzae, Tunzae. 2. Bûran:—Chin, Chalo, Zabar, Ali, Suliman.	In the country bounded N. by the Kabul river, E. by the Suliman Mts., W. by the Gulkoh Mts. S. by Kalat-i-Ghilzae and Poti; 300 miles long, 100 miles broad. A branch at Khubes and Nurmanshahr, Persia.
4. Yûsafzae ..	130	700,000	1. Mandan:—Usman, Utman 2. Yûsaf:—Isa, Ilias, Mali, Rani.	The hills N. of Peshawar district and in the Yusafzae division of the Peshawar district.
5. Mohmandzae or Mahmandzae ..	63	40,000	Tarakzae; Halim; Baizae; Khwai; Utman.	The hills N. W. of Peshawar between Kabul and Swat rivers; chief town Lalpûra.

Main Sections.	Total No. of Khels.	Population.	Chief Subdivisions.	Geographical Position.
6. Kakars	45	200,000	Jala; Musa; Kadi; Usman; Khidar; Abdula.	Extreme S.E. corner of Afghanistan proper.
7. Khataks ..	70	100,000	Tari; Taraki; Bolak ..	S.E. part Peshawar district, and S. and E. of Kohat; some also now amongst the Yusafzaes.
8. Utman Khel ..	33	80,000	Asil; Shamo; Mandal; Ali ..	The hills N. of Peshawar between the Mohmands and Yûsafzaes.
9. Bangash ..	20	100,000	Miranzae; Baizae; Samalzae	Miranzae, Kohat, and Kûram valleys; said to be originally from Sistan.
10. Afridis ..	180	90,000	Kuki; Malikdîn; Kambar; Kamr; Zakha; Aka.	Lower and easternmost spurs Sufed Koh Mts., W. and S. of the Peshâwar district, with Bara valley and parts of Chura and Tira valleys.
11. Orakzae or Wurukzae	70	30,000	Daolat; Utman; Sipah; Ishmail; Rabia; Isa.	The Tira highlands, N. and W. of Kohat.
12. Shinwaris or Shanwaris ..	30	50,000	Sangu; Ali Sher; Sipai; Babur; Lohargae.	Parts of Khaibar Mts., E. valleys of Sufed Koh and on borders of Bajawar. Note.—10, 11, and 12, are collectively known as the Khaibarts.
13. Tiraes	8	7,500	Shibdwani; Seh Pai ..	In the Kot valley of the Shinwari country, but distinct from them.
14. Jaduns or Gaduns..	10	5,000	Salar; Matkhwa; Mansur ..	S. side Mahaban Mts., and Hazara district, Peshawar; said to be Kakars originally, though now with the Yûsafzaes.
15. Tarins	20	20,000	Spin:—Shadi, Marpani, Lasrani.	N. frontier Baloch province Kachi.
16. Povindahs ..	120	50,000	Tor:—Bateh, Haikal, Mali Lohani; Nasar; Niazi; Daotani; Kharoti: Miani.	From head of Gomal S. to head of Lora river along W. Suliman range, their territory forming a triangle hemmed in between the Ghilzaes, Vaziris and Kakars.
17. Vaziris or Waziris ..	320	250,000	1. Utman:—Mahmud, Ibrahim 2. Ahmad:—Shin, Sirki, Umur 3. Mahsud:—Ali, Shahman 4. Gurbaz; 5. Lali	Suliman Mts., from Thal to Gomal Pass, 30°-32° N. lat. A branch now with the Khugianis (2.).
18. Shiranis ..	130	35,000	1. Chua:—Yahîa, Bairam .. 2. Sen:—Ahmad, Yahia 3. Uba:—Ahmad, Manu	Suliman Mts. from the Shekh Haidar Pass southwards to the Ramak.
19. Babars	15	20,000	Mahsud; Bahadin; Musa; Ahmad; Mardan.	In the Koh-i-Daman of the Dera Ismail Khan district, opposite the Sangao and Dahina passes; same stock as the Shiranis
20. Turis	52	30,000	Gundi; Ali; Mula; Mastu; Firoz; Maru.	Kuram valley. (See Note under 21.)
21. Jajis	50	4,000	Maidan; Danni; Isteah; Algarh; Ada; Lehwanni; Alî; Ahmed; Bian; Shamu.	Kuram valley, mostly about river Ariob, and from the Shutar Gardan to the Paiwar pass. Note.—20. and 21. are not regarded as true Pathans, being traditionally sprung of two Mughal brothers, Tor and Jaji. Edwardes says they are Khatar Hindkis from Rawalpindi.
22. Zaemûkhts ..	33	25,000	1. Khwaidad:—Babakar, Hasn 2. Mahamad:—Wati, Manatu, Mandan.	In the hills between Miranzae and Kûram.
23. Dawaris.. ..	6	20,000	1. Tapi:—Haidar, Idak .. 2. Malai:—Darpa, Amzani.	Dawari valley, 32° 57′—33° 7′ N. lat.
24. Khostwals ..	10	12,000	Ishmail; Matûn; Mandu Shamal.	Upper Khost valley, adjoining Kuram and Zurmat.
25. Mangals ..	14	25,000	Lajhwar:—Fattakeh, Agar, Andaz, Miral, Khajuri, Zab.	On Lajhi river, Kuram valley, and parts of Zurmat; are supposed to be of Mughal descent.
16. Jadrans.. ..	..	15,000	.....	East of Zurmat, E. side of Suliman Mts.
27. Ushtaranas ..	42	8,000	1. Gagal:—Shaho, Musa, Ako, Shamo. 2. Ahmad:—Ibrahim, Kadr, Mashar.	The hills opposite extreme S. part Dera Ismail Khan district. Are disowned by the Afghans, though apparently of Lohani (Povindah) stock.
28. Esots	15	5,000	1. Noh:—Ahmad, Zado, Jahan, Chado. 2. Mûal:—Ado, Khidr, Painda, Khadi.	The hills west of Dera Ismail Khan. Are said to be of Kakar origin, though now distinct; Troglodytes.
29. Jafars	12	5,000	Ramdani; Mohra; Rajali; Rawani.	Between the Bûj spur of the Suliman Mts. and the Bozdar Bilochis.
	1,790	3,521,000

Of the main sections in the above table, Nos. 1. to 12. inclusive, are recognised as true Afghans, and of these, Nos. 1. and 3. (Durânis and Ghilzaes) are by far the most important and influential. Since the time of Nadir Shah, the Durânis have been the ruling tribe, the Popalzae division till 1818, the Barakzae from that year to the present time. They were formerly called the Abdali or Avdali, a name which has been traced to the Ephthalites and Abdela of the Byzantine writers of the sixth century. But it was changed to Durâni from the title of Durri-Durân, "Pearl of the Age," assumed by the Sardar Ahmad Khan, of the Saddozae branch of the Popalzaes, when he usurped the supreme power at Kandahar on the death of Nadir Shah, in 1747. The seat of government was removed from Kandahar to Kâbul by his successor Taimûn Shah (ob. 1793), and this dynasty became extinct in 1818, when it was succeeded by the Barakzaes in Kâbul, though various descendants of Ahmad Khan continued and still continue to assert their claims to the sovereignty in Herat.

Although mentioned in the national genealogies, the right of the Ghilzaes to be considered as Pukhtûns at all, much less genuine Afghans, has been questioned. There certainly seems to be a flaw in their escutcheon, and they themselves, (who always call themselves Ghilji, and not Ghil-zae,) claim Tûrki descent. The national tradition is that they entered the country in the tenth century under a certain Sabaktagin, of the Kilich Tûrki tribe "anciently situated on the upper course of the Jaxartes"[1] (Syr Darya). But however this be, they are now entirely assimilated in habits, dress, religion, and speech, to the other Afghan tribes, with the exception of a few who are still nomads.

None of the other sections call for special remark except the Povindahs, who are at once agriculturists, traders, and warriors, their armed caravans yearly fighting their way through the intervening hostile tribes down to the markets of the Panjâb and Sindh. The name is supposed to be derived from the Persian Parwinda, a bale of goods, and seems to be indifferently applied to the Lohanis, Waziris, Kâkars, Ghilzaes, or any other tribe temporarily or permanently forming part of this singular "trades' union." By far the most important section are the Lohanis, the oldest and most numerous members of the association, and one of the most promising elements for the future pacific settlement and material prospects of the country.

Physically the Afghans may be described as, on the whole, a fine race. Their features, though often coarse and ugly, are regular in the European sense of the term, with the occasional Jewish cast above remarked upon. Type, long, oval face, arched nose, head mesaticephalous, that is, intermediate between the round and the long, measured horizontally, with cranial index 79;[2] fair complexion, thick beard, hair and eyes generally black, but light blue or grey eyes and brown hair common amongst the Rohillas,[3] as the Sulimân highlanders are often collectively called.

The great bulk of the people are Sunnites, which is one of the causes of their profound aversion to the Persians, who are mainly of the Shiah sect. Yet the nobles and upper classes, especially amongst the Durânis, usually converse and always correspond in Persian. The consequence is that the Pukhtu, or national language, has remained a somewhat rude idiom, seldom employed in literature, and in refined society regarded as little better than a provincial patois. Its importance philologically is considerable, for though usually grouped with the Iranian branch of the Aryan family, Dr. Ernest Trumpp (Grammar, 1873), gives it a more ndependent position, as intermediate between the Iranic and Indic, while Prof. Haug, of Munich, now regards it as a separate member of the family. It is very harsh and spoken with considerable dialectic variety everywhere in Afghanistan proper, except the Hazarajat, and also in the Peshâwar district of British India. The most marked dialects seem to be the Kandahari, Diri, Tirhai, Peshâwari, Khaibari, Tarni, Vazîri, and Ushtarâni. The Pashae and Laghmâni, sometimes included in the list, are not Pukhtu at all, or even Iranian, but distinctly Sanskritic, closely allied to the Siah Posh and Kohistâni.

BALUCHISTAN, or the country of His Highness the Khan of Kelat. This country lies south of Afghanistan, extending on the south to the Arabian Sea, on the east to the frontier of Sind, and on the west to the frontier of Persia. It extends from latitude 24° 53′ to 30° 20′ N., and from longitude 61° 0′ to 69° 45′ E., its greatest length on the north from east to west being about 550 miles, and greatest breadth north to south about 380 miles. Its area is about 160,000 square miles. Its coast line is remarkably regular but craggy and not much elevated; towards the interior, however, there is rapid elevation. On the coast there are several well-sheltered roadsteads, particularly Sonmiani bay and Chaubar bay, but no good harbours.

Much of this country is unexplored, in describing it therefore only an approximation to accuracy can be attained. It comprises seven divisions or provinces, viz., Cutch-Gandava and country of the Maris and Bugtis on the north-east, Sarawan on the north, Jhalawar on the east, Lus, on the south-east, Makran occupying an extensive length of country on the south, Kohistan or the mountain country on the west, and Kelat, in which is situated the capital of the same name. The interior of the country is rugged, and barren. Its eastern side is crossed from north to south by the Hala and Khirtari ranges of hills, which are a continuation of the Suliman range, but there are no very lofty eminences. The whole country is described as a maze of mountains, except on the north-west where it becomes part of the desert. The direction of these mountain chains are almost wholly unknown with exception of a few of the principal ranges. One vast chain stretches along the entire coast, from the vicinity of Ras Jyuni on the west, to the river Purali on the east. Parallel to this range, and at the distance of about 70 miles north from it, another well defined chain intersects Makran and joins with the Sarawani mountains near Bela. A third parallel range, called the Wushuti or Mue mountains, about 110 miles further north from the last described chain, forms part of the northern boundary of Baluchistan, separating it from the great southern desert of Afghanistan. The other remarkable chains are the Bushkurd mountains, about 240 miles in length, and the Sarawani mountains stretching in a north-east direction.

The rivers of Baluchistan are the Bholan, Rodbat, Lora, Shirinab and Mula in the north, the Hubb, Sinamani, Marwar, Nari, Urnach and Purali in the east, the Shadi, Mokula, Bhasul, Ghish, and Gasbastan in the south, and the Dasht, Rakshan, Bhado, Gwargo, Nehing and Mashkhid in the west; with the exception of the Hubb they all dry up, or are lost in the earth during the dry weather, in the wet season, however, they are destructive mountain torrents. Few of them flow through regular and well-defined channels. Along the whole 500 miles of coast which Baluchistan possesses, there is no stream which cannot in dry weather be forded.

Part of Baluchistan to the north-west consists of a sandy desert quite impassable in summer owing to the sandstorms, when the wind is so scorching as utterly to destroy animal life, and throughout the whole country there is a great deficiency of water.

There are numerous passes in Baluchistan, of which the Bholan and Mula are the chief. A Railway is now in course of construction, starting from Sukkur station of the Indus Valley State Railway, to Quetta viâ Sibi, to be carried eventually to Kandahar; this line is now open to a distance about twenty miles beyond Sibi. (See Bombay Presidency.)

The crest of the Bholan Pass is about 5,793 above the sea; there is little descent on the western side as it merely reaches the top of the plateau; the roadway is difficult, part of the road being cut through high perpendicular hills; the total length is about 54 miles, and the average ascent 90 feet in a mile. The whole of the low country before reaching the pass entrance near Dadar is barren, sandy and extremely hot in the summer.

The climate of Baluchistan is extreme. The cold during winter is exceedingly intense, snow lying on the ground for two months in the winter even in the fertile valleys, while in summer, the heat is overpowering on the lower grounds. Some parts of Makran are said to be the hottest localities in Asia. In February and March a good deal of rain falls, after which the dry season commences and lasts till September.

The country is said to be rich in minerals. Copper and iron especially being met with in large quantities, and gold, silver, lead, antimony, saltpetre and sulphur are also to be found. There are mud volcanoes at Lus near a place where iron ore is worked. The soil is not in genera fertile, but patient industry has rendered the plains and valleys productive in wheat, barley the millets and pulses of various kinds, oil seeds, cotton, rice, indigo and tobacco. The sugar cane grows chiefly on the plains of Lus and the date in Makran. Vegetables of every kind are abundant, and the gardens and orchards in the vicinity of the towns produce the finest fruits; on the coast fish are caught in great quantities.

The manufactures of Baluchistan are unimportant, being confined to a few matchlocks and other fire-arms at Kelat.

The inhabitants are divided into two great branches, the Baluchis and the Brahuis, differing in language, figure and manners. The Baluchis are tall, well-formed and of dark complexion the Brahuis, so-called from the words bah-ruh-i (on the waste), are much shorter and broader with hair and beards frequently brown. They are most numerous in the province of Jhalawar and in the north and west. They have great physical strength, and are generally more peaceful than the Baluchis. Both races are pastoral, hospitable, brave, excellent marksmen and capable of enduring much fatigue, and belong to the Sunni sect of Mahomedans. Neither possesses a written language and their early histories have not been preserved. Polygamy is universal, few however have more than two wives, some of the chiefs have four. Wives are obtained by purchase, and paid for in sheep, &c., and a man is expected to marry the widow of a deceased brother. On the occurence of a death, the body is watched for three nights by friends and relatives, and the time is passed in feasting.

The government is despotic, the Khan having unlimited power over life, person and property, his rule being confined for the most part to the province immediately around his capital, the greater part of the country being held by tribal chiefs, over whom he has little or no control, though they furnish contingents of men in case of war, and pay tribute, an obligation which is often evaded. The revenues are estimated at upwards of Rs. 3,00,000.

The chief towns of Baluchistan are Kelat, the capital, about 6,000 feet above the sea, Bela or Lus near the coast, Dadar, Gandava, Mustang, Nushki, Sarawan, Kej, Pasni, Dera, Sonmeani and Quetta, the inferior towns are Chahgeh, Diz, Tump, Sami and Kharan.

The languages spoken are Baluchi and Persian.

BHUTAN.—Very little is known of this territory which lies to the east of Sikkim, between the Jalpaiguri and Goalpara districts of Bengal and Assam, and the mountains that form the southern slope of the Himalayas. It extends from east to west 230 miles, with a breadth of about 120 miles, lying between latitudes 26° 18′ and 28° 2′ N. and longitudes 88° 32′ and about 92° 30′ E. The eastern limits are not certainly known; the area is about 19,000 square miles. It is crossed by two ranges of mountain land parallel to the great mountain chain beyond; one (the nearest), 8,000 feet high generally, with occasional peaks as much as 16,000 feet, the other, more distant and less lofty. Between the Himalayas and the first range is a high table-land, too bleak and barren to be habitable, except at the foot of the first range where are most of the principal towns. To the east of the second range the land is level, and southwards of the lower range are the Duars, tracts of country of extraordinary fertility, whose produce once formed the chief means of subsistence of the people. These Duars were ceded to the British in 1866 in return for an annual payment of money. On the north Bhutan is bounded by Tibet, and on the east by tracts inhabited by uncivilized mountain tribes. The scenery of Bhutan is scarcely to be equalled by that of any other country, at one view may be seen rugged barren hills and valleys covered with luxuriant vegetation, rushing mountain torrents and gentle streams, dense forests and sunny slopes, placid lakes and steep precipices, and vast ranges covered with eternal snow, while in regard to climate, the cold of Siberia, the heat of Africa, and the pleasant warmth of Italy, may all be experienced in a day's journey.

The soil produces rice, wheat and millet in abundance, and game of all kinds abounds in the forests—sheep, ponies and a hardy breed of horned cattle are reared. The roads are mere tracks through ravines which become torrents in the rainy season. The population, estimated at about 20,000, consists of three classes, the priests, the chiefs or Penlows, who are the governing class, and the cultivators.

The country is governed nominally by a person called the Dharm Raja, supposed to be a divinity in human shape, but really by the Deb Raja, who is elected by the Penlows every three years from their own number. Buddhism is the religion of the country and the inhabitants are hardy and vigorous, with dark skins, and high cheek bones.

Bhutan trades with all the neighbouring countries but chiefly with Thibet, Bengal and Assam, in horses, cloth, musk, fly-whisks, walnuts, oranges and Indian madder, receiving in exchange woollen cloths, cottons, asafœtida, spices, tea, gold, silver and embroideries. The revenues of the country are usually paid in articles of produce and merchandise.

The chief towns are Punakha or Dosen the capital, on the left bank of the Bŭgni river, and ninety-six miles east-north-east from Darjeeling; Tasichozong and Paro on the river Gudada, and Toungsa on the road from Assam to Lhassa. The other towns are Wandipur, Ghassa and Murichom. Punakha is a place of great natural strength.

The Towang Bhutias occupy the southern slopes of the Himalayas to the eastward of Bhutan proper, of which state they are independent. A considerable trade between Lhassa and Assam is carried on through them. The Towangs are quiet and friendly. Eastward of the Towangs are the Char Duar and Thebengea Bhutias, two small and well-behaved clans. The territory of the Towang Bhutias extends to the river Rowta, that of the Char Duar Bhutias from the Rowta to the Ghaben river.

A few Bhutias inhabit the Eastern Duars portion of the Goalpara district of Assam, and resemble in every respect their countrymen in the Bhutan hills.

The language spoken by the Bhutias is said to be a dialect of the Thibetan, more or less blended with words and idioms of the countries on which their own territory touches. In their religious observances, the most remarkable circumstance is the noise with which they are accompanied. The instruments used are clarionets sometimes formed of silver and brass, but generally of wood with reed pipes, horns, shells, cymbals, drums and gongs.

The garments of the people consist of a long loose robe which wraps round the body, and is secured in its position by a leather belt round the waist. A legging of broadcloth is attached to a shoe made generally of buffaloe hide. No Bhutia ever travels during the winter without protecting his legs and feet against the effects of the snow, by putting on these boots, which are secured by a garter tied under the knee. A cap made of fur or coarse woolen cloth completes the habiliment, and the only variation observable is the substitution of a cloth for a woolen robe during the summer months of the year. The diet of the great body of the people is the most miserable it is possible to conceive; they are restricted to the refuse of wretched crops of unripe wheat and barley, and their food consists chiefly of cakes made from these grains very imperfectly ground. The food of the superior classes consists of the flesh of goats, swine and cattle, and of rice imported from the Duars. The mode of preparing their food is most inartificial and rude, with little attention to cleanlines and still less to the quality of the meat they consume. They are very fond of tea and use it in large quantities. All classes are very much addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors. Their amusements are almost entirely confined to archery and quoits, and their character seldom appears to greater advantage than when engaged in these exercises. The character of the Bhutias, by the nature of their institutions, stands low in the social scale. Every element of deterioration is comprised in their government both secular and spiritual. Their energies are paralysed by the insecurity of property, their morals are degraded, and their numbers reduced by the unnatural system of polyandry and the excessive prevalence of monastic institutions.

KASHMIR or CASHMERE.—A name now given to an extensive tract of country, reaching from the Punjab on the south and west, to Thibet on the north and east, its extreme length being about 400 miles and its breadth 280 miles. The boundary of this territory on the north and north-east is undefined, or unknown. The country includes the valley of Kashmir proper, 5,300 to 6,000 feet above the sea, Ladak or Leh, Baltistan or little Thibet, and several provinces of smaller importance, viz: Jummoo Bhadrawar, Gilghit, Kistwar, Naoshera, Punch, Rukshu and others, and is almost entirely mountainous. In the southern portion, the mountain sides are clothed with forests of cedar and pine, but further northwards towards Thibet, there are large tracts destitute even of a trace of vegetation. The scenery of the mountains is in the highest, degree picturesque. The grandeur and splendour of Kashmir scenery results from the sublimity of the huge enclosing mountains, the beauty of the various gorges, the numerous lakes and fine streams, rendered often more striking by cataracts, the luxuriance and variety of the forest trees and the rich and varied vegetation of the lower ground.

The valley of Kashmir is an expansion of part of the valley of the Jhelum, here called the Behat. It is an oval plain, 4,500 square miles in area, surrounded on all sides by lofty mountains, whose passes on the north side are not less than 10,000 feet above the sea. The actual plain or bottom of the valley is about seventy miles long and thirty to forty miles wide, and is 5,300 feet above the sea. The river Jhelum flows through it in a winding and tranquil, navigable stream, at one time washing the base of the hills on one side and then crossing to the other. On the rising of the river in summer, when the snow melts on the mountains, the whole plain would be inundated, but for a system of dykes called bunds placed along the course of the stream. The river expands into lakes, one of which, the Wulur is about twenty miles long by nine broad, and another near the city of Srinagar the capital, as long, but of only half the breadth. The soil of the valley is most fertile and produces corn of all kinds, fruits, nuts and flowers.

The inhabitants of the valley are chiefly Mahomedans of the Sunni class, but in the surrounding country they exhibit a mixture of the Hindu and the Tartar, the Tartar characteristics being more marked as we approach the mountains, the dress, customs and even the religion changing gradually with the changes of the physical features of the country. The language of the country is Cashmiri, derived from the Sanskrit and the Persian.

The climate of the country though subject to extremes of temperature, is on the whole salubrious, and is divided into the four seasons as elsewhere ; but the periodical rains of India do not reach so far into the mountains. March and Aprll are somewhat rainy, May and June are dry and fine, July and August are the hottest part of the year and are marked by thunderstorms. The winter lasts four months, and the ground is then covered with snow. Earthquakes are frequent.

The most celebrated manufacture of Kashmir is that of shawls, the wool used in their manufacture being of two kinds, one obtained from the tame, the other from the wild goat, wild sheep and other wild animals, the fine down growing next to the skin alone is taken. The demand for these shawls has from various causes greatly fallen off of late years, and is still on the wane. Otto of roses is also made in large quantity and of the finest quality. Fire-arms, saddlery, leather, papier-mache, lacquered ware and paper are largely manufactured, and the artizans employ extraordinary pains in their manufacture, producing with their rude tools, work of extaordinary beauty and excellence.

The chief towns are Kashmir or Srinagar and Jummoo, the two capitals, Skardo on the upper Indus, Islamabad, Kishtwar, Leh, Astor, Naoshera, Shahabad, Punch, Shapiyon and Gilghit.

Golab Sing, the father of the present prince, was put in possession of the whole country by the British in 1846, to whom it had been ceded in 1845 by the Sikhs, who held possession of it since 1819, when they took it from the Afghans who had conquered it in 1752.

Numerous passes lead into the Kashmir territory and valley, many of which are practicable for horses, but none for wheeled carriages, the principal among which may be mentioned, the Nabog pass on the eastern frontier ; the Banihal pass 9,700 feet high, on the southern frontier ; the Baramulla pass, westwards, or Punch pass 8,500 feet high, on the western frontier; Baramulla pass, southwards, and the Pir Panjal pass, 11,500 feet high, through which the road from Bhimbar goes. (See Punjab Province native states.)

MANIPUR is a rugged mountainous country south-east of Assam, between Assam and the Burman empire. It is intersected by two great valleys, one on the west and the other through the centre of the territory. In the central valley, rice, pulse, sugar-cane and tobacco grow luxuriantly and the tea plant flourishes throughout. The soil is very fruitful, but there is little cultivation. There are several brine springs in the territory. Iron ore is found and there are manufactures of iron and copper, the latter being chiefly worked as bell-metal for drinking and other vessels, as well as coins. The territory is 125 miles in length from north to south, and about 100 miles in breadth. There are no public works, except a road from Cachar to the capital, Imphal. The Manipuris, though Hindus of the Kshattriya or warrior caste are not of Aryan descent, their origin is locally ascribed to the union of two powerful tribes one Naga and the other Kuki, which had for a long time contended for the possession of the Manipur valleys. They are tall, well made and of a fair complexion. In character they are cunning, and treacherous in dealing with those who are not of their own race, but on the other hand they seem to behave with great honesty to one another, and their fidelity to their leaders is remarkable; they first became Hindus about a century ago. The country is regarded as neutral territory between British India and Burmah, and its boundaries on the east or Burmah side, are quite unsettled. (See Assam Province native states.)

NEPAL.—This independent state extends from Latitude 26° 25′ to 30° 17′ N. and from Longitude 80° 15′ to 88° 15′ E., and is bounded on the north by Thibet; on the east by Sikkim and the British district of Darjeeling; on the south by the British districts of Basti, Gorakhpur, Chumparun, Mozufferpore, Durbhunga, Bhagalpur and Purneah; on the south-west by Oudh, and on the west by the British district of Kumaun. Its length from east to west is about 550 miles, and its breadth about 160 miles, having an area of about 84,500 square miles. The principal territorial divisions are Murang, Chaynpur, Makmani, Khatang, Nepal proper, Gurkha, Khachi, and Malibum. The territory exhibits great diversity of surface and climate, and corresponding differences of vegetable and animal life; it is traversed by several considerable streams, and is divided into five parallel zones. The principal rivers which traverse Nepal, are the Karnali, Gandak, Trisul-Ganga, Bori-Gandak, Kosi, Gogra and Bagmati, most of them rising in the highlands of Thibet. Along its southern border extends the Tarai, a long narrow strip of marshy forest and jungle, about twenty miles broad, beyond this is a forest region producing a great variety of valuable timber. Beyond this again the country becomes more hilly and continues to rise in terraces. Still further north, these begin to assume a mountainous character, beyond and above which rises the great Snowy Range, where are found Mount Everest (29,002 feet), Dhawalagiri (26,862 feet), Gosainthan, Kanchinjunga (28,156 feet), and others, the highest peaks in the world. Among the mountains are several inhabited valleys, varying in height from 3,000 to 6,000 feet above the plains of Bengal. Of these the valley of Nepal proper is perhaps the largest, being twelve miles long, and nine miles broad. It is bounded on all sides by lofty mountains, and its undulating surface is covered with a rich expanse of cultivated land, watered by numerous winding streams, and studded with villages and towns. The valley has the appearance of a lake bed, and Hindu records describe it as having been so at some former time.

The climate of Nepal, notwithstanding its low latitude, from its great and varying elevations above the level of the sea, is characterised by the widest extremes in different parts, and all degrees of temperature, from the cold of Siberia to the burning heat of the African desert, may be experienced in a day or twos' journey. Generally, however, the climate resembles in some respects that of southern Europe. The seasons are those of Upper India, but the rains commence earlier and set in from the south-east. In the Tarai, putrid fever is common, and fatal from the middle of March to the middle of November.

The mineral productions of this country are varied and important. Copper and iron mines are worked in the hills, and lead, arsenic and building stone abound. Mines of sulphur are said to be numerous, but little is known about them. The manufactures include utensils of copper, brass and iron, the casting of bells and the fabrication of cutlery, ordnance, guns and swords, also coarse cotton-cloth and paper. Iron, copper, ivory, timber, hides, rice, ginger, wax, honey, cardamoms and fruits are exported.

The revenue is said to be about 43,00,000 Rupees, and the population, about 3,000,000, consists of Gurkhas, Newars, Bhutias and aboriginal mountain tribes. The Gurkhas are the ruling race and are Hinduized Tartars, the Newars, chiefly confined to Nepal proper, are agriculturists, traders and artizans, they have Chinese features and are also of Tartar origin, the Bhutias inhabit the higher ranges adjoining Thibet. All classes drink spirituous liquors to excess, and most of the domestic servants are slaves. The language spoken by the Gurkhas is a mountain dialect of Hindi called Prabatiya; the dialect of the Newars is peculiar to themselves; Hindustani, however, is generally understood.

The chief towns are Katmandu, the capital, 4,784ft. in elevation and head-quarters of the Resident, having a population of about 50,000 souls, Lalita-Patan, Bhatgaon, Gurkha, Jamla and Makwanpur. This country is almost entirely unexplored, owing to the watchful vigilance and jealousy manifested by the ruling race in this respect. The British Government, practically has no influence over Nepal, and except the Resident at Katmandu, no Englishman can enter, much more explore the country, and no survey can be executed, nor is the exact nature of the relations between Nepal and China correctly known, though it is said, a mission with presents proceeds to China every five years.

SIKKIM.—A small mountainous tract, between Nepal and Bhutan, which last it resembles in its physical features, and its productions are similar. On its northern frontier are some of the highest peaks of the Himalayan chain. It is about sixty-six miles in length from north to south, and about fifty-two in breadth. The population consists of Murmis, Lepchas, Bhutias and Limbus. The Rajah resides at the capital, Tamlang, from November to May, when he moves to Chumbi, on the Thibetan side of the range. Sikkim is allowed £100 to £200 a year by the Government at Lhassa, and the allowance from the British Government has been increased to £1,200 a year, on the condition that every facility should be given to trade with Thibet. (See Bengal native states.)

HILL TIPPERAH.—A mountainous tract bounded on the north by the British districts of Sylhet and Cachar, on the east by Burmah, on the south by the British districts of Chittagong and Chittagong Hill Tracts, and on the west by British Tipperah. It is about 130 miles in length from north to south, and about fifty miles in breadth, and covered with dense bamboo jungle infested with wild animals. The inhabitants are called Kukis, and cultivate rice, cotton, Indian corn, indigo, yams, beans and other vegetables. The soil is exceedingly fertile and the tea plant grows wild. The government is in the hands of a number of chiefs who levy tribute on their dependents at will, themselves paying an annual tribute to the Maharajah of the State. (See Bengal native states.)

OCEAN ISLANDS.

Near the Malabar, Coromandel and Burmah Coasts.

ANDAMAN ISLANDS AND COCOS.—A chain of four large and several smaller islands, of volcanic origin, about 200 miles west of the coast of the Tenasserim province of British Burmah, extending north and south parallel to the coast, between the 10th and the 15th degrees of north Latitude, and the 92nd and 94th degrees of east Longitude, of a total length of about 200 miles, and an area of about 2,700 square miles. In this extent, north and south, are included the island of Preparis, uninhabited, and the islands of the Cow and Calf, which by some are excluded from this group, also the Cocos and Narcondam. They consist of a mountain ridge, rising at Saddle Peak to 2,400 feet, the escarped side being towards the east and sloping to the west. The main portion is about 140 miles in length, but divided into three parts by very narrow straits. Dangerous coral reefs surround the group, and dense tropical forest, coming down to the water's edge, covers the greater part of their surface. They are peopled by dwarfed and woolly headed savages of the Papuan race, who have no fixed habitation, no pursuit, and no government, smearing themselves with mud and ochre as a protection from insects, and manifesting the most hostile disposition on every attempt to establish intercourse with them. There are several excellent harbours, the best of them being Port Blair, where a penal colony for all India was established in 1868, when the whole group was formally annexed and placed under an officer now styled the 'Chief Commissioner and Superintendent of the Andaman and Nicobar islands,' in direct correspondence with the Government of India. These islands are singularly interesting for their zoology, several species of large land animals being apparently confined to them. They have recently yielded a new large sized chimpanzee and a new species of hog. The population of the entire group, excluding the convict settlement, is about 3,000, and is fast dying out.

The four largest islands of the group, are named respectively, North, Middle, South and Little Andaman ; Middle Andaman, the largest, being about 60 miles long and 20 broad ; South Andaman, 50 miles long and 23 broad. The last, about thirty miles in length, is separated from the main group of three by a strait called "Duncan Passage." Port Blair, 800 miles from Calcutta, is in the South Andaman, and is reached by a steamer from thence in four days. Mount Harriet, at the foot of which Earl Mayo was assassinated, is in the North Andaman. This mountain rises some 1,200 feet above sea level. Jungle fever is common here, and it is not safe to sleep on the lower slopes of the mount, which has a good bungalow at the summit, with a good road to it. The North Andaman is deeply indented by bays, clothed with the most lovely scenery. The chief government buildings and barracks are on Ross island, and there are extensive saw mills at Chatham island. The worst class of convicts are kept at Viper's island, where there is an Andaman village. Tea cultivation has been commenced at a point called Aberdeen in the central island. The Latitude of Port Blair (Chatham Island) is 11° 41′ 13″ N. Longitude 92° 42′ 44″ E.

Adjoining the Andaman Islands, between them and the Mergui Archipelago, is Barren Island, a remarkable, active volcano. The whole of this island is a volcanic cone about two miles in diameter as it rises out of the sea, and 1,700 feet high ; its last recorded eruption took place in 1792. On the north, are the two small uninhabited islands called The Cocos, distant from Port Blair 175 miles, the larger of which is six miles long and two miles broad, the smaller, two and a half miles long and a mile broad. The Coco channel separates them from the Andamans.

NICOBAR ISLANDS.—A group of islands situated between the parallels of 6° 40′ and 9° 20′, and meridians of 93° and 94°, about 150 miles south of the Andamans and about the same distance from Sumatra. They form two groups, the south group composed of the islands Great and Little Nicobar or Sambelong,—the former about thirty miles long by twelve broad, and the latter fourteen miles long, by ten broad, separated by St. George's channel, about six miles broad—and several smaller islets. The north group, separated from the south by the Sombrero channel, is composed of the islands Katchall, Nancowry, Camorta (the largest), Trinkut, Terressa, Bompocka, Tillanchong, Chowry, Batti-Malve, and the distant Car Nicobar. They possess two good harbours, and the southern group is covered to the highest summits with dense forest, while the northern is only wooded on the lower slopes of the hills, towards the sea-board, the tops being covered with grass. They are inhabited by piratical Malays, who carry on a considerable traffic in cocoanuts, betel-nuts, pigs, poultry and yams. Compared with the Andamanese, these people are perfectly civilised ; they wear clothing, speak a little English and construct their boats and huts with great ingenuity. The population is small, about 8,000. The Danes formed a settlement there in 1756, but abandoned all claim to the sovereignty over the islands in 1848. Formal possession was taken of the whole group in the year 1869 by the British, Government, for a convict setflement. The climate is unhealthy. Nancowry is distant 225 miles from Port Blair and 390 miles from Rangoon.

LACCADIVE ISLANDS.—A cluster of coral islands lying about 100 miles off the Malabar coast of India, between the parallels of 10° and 13° N. and the meridians of 72° and 74°, E., and containing a population of about seven or eight thousand souls. They form twenty Atols or groups, besides numerous small islands or reefs. The largest, named Underroot, is the most productive, the rest being comparatively barren, yielding little else than cocoanuts. The natives are a mild and inoffensive race, living poorly and dwelling in low thatched, stone built houses. The greater portion of these islands were under the uncontrolled management of a Princess of Cannanore, subject to the payment of an annual tribute to the British Government of £1,000 This tribute having fallen into arrear, the whole of the five group of islands in her possession were attached, and are now under British administration. They are included in the district of south Kanara, under the Madras jurisdiction. The island of Minicoy, lying further south, near the parallel of 8°, is also included in the same district.

MALDIVE ISLANDS; or, Malediva (Thousand Isles). A chain of coral islands south of the Laccadives, extending from Latitude 0° 40′ S. to 7° 6′ N., and nearly on the meridian of 73° 30′ E., with a breadth of about fifty miles. The group is composed of seventeen Atols, each of which is fringed with reefs, sometimes extending to the distance of two or three miles, beyond which there are no soundings. In the centre of each Atol, there is a lagoon of from 15 to 49 fathoms in depth. They are richly clothed with wood, chiefly palm, and are fertile in fruit and various edible roots; they also produce millet, and abound in cocoanuts, fowls and all descriptions of fish. The inhabitants are a timid, inoffensive and civilised race, and carry on a considerable trade with Bengal, Ceylon, the Malabar Coast, and Sumatra. They are expert navigators and sailors, and have schools for teaching navigation on some of the islands, and even make and repair nautical instruments. They are remarkable for their hospitality and kindness to shipwrecked mariners, for which they refuse all pecuniary compensation, and are Mahomedans governed by a Sultan whose title and rank are hereditary. He resides in the island of Male or Mohl, and pays an annual tribute to the British Government in Ceylon. The population consists of about 200,000 souls.

CEYLON.—This large and beautiful island, "The jewel of the Eastern Seas," lies to the south of the peninsula of India, between the parallels of 5° 55′ and 9° 51′ North Latitude, and the meridians of 79° 41′ and 81° 54′ East Longitude. It is separated from the main-land by Palk's Strait, and the Gulf of Manaar, which at their narrowest part, along what is known as Adam's Bridge, are about sixty-two miles in width. The distance between the most northerly point of the peninsula of Jaffna, and Point Calimere on the coast of the Karnatik, is only about forty miles. Its greatest length, from north to south, is about 270 miles, and its greatest width, from east to west, about 156 miles. Its area is about 24,454 square miles.

Adam's Bridge, which almost connects Ceylon with the main-land of India, consists of a chain of low coral reefs and sand-banks, stretching between the islands of Manaar and Paumben.

The central part of the island is mountainous, consisting of a succession of mountainous ridges with intervening valleys, many of them of considerable elevation. The highest peak is that of Pedrotallagalla, which overlooks the plain of Nuwara Eliya, and reaches an elevation of 8,260 feet. The plain itself is upwards of 6,200 feet above the sea level, and is resorted to as a sanitarium by the English residents of the low country.

Other important heights are Kirrigalpota 7,810 feet, Totapella 7,720 feet, and Adam's peak, an isolated mountain on the south-west of the central mountain zone, formerly supposed to be the highest in Ceylon, but now ascertained to be only 7,420 feet in height. Between the mountainous district and the sea, there is a broad belt of low country extending around the coast, but narrower in the southern part of the island than in the northern.

Numerous rivers and streams take their rise among the mountains in the interior, and flow in all directions to the sea. The largest of these are the Mahawila-Ganga, which rises in the neighbourhood of Nuwara Eliya, and flows into the Bay of Bengal near Trincomalee; the Kalany-Ganga, which enters the sea a little to the north of Colombo on the western coast; the Kalu-Ganga, Maha Oya, and several others. Although few of its rivers are available to any great extent for navigation, no country in the world is perhaps so well watered as Ceylon. There are no natural lakes, properly so-called, in the island, but along different parts of the eastern and western coasts, there are extensive lagoons or backwaters, similar to those on the Malabar coast of the Madras Presidency.

The climate of Ceylon is peculiarly under the influence of the monsoons. The north-east monsoon prevails from November till March or April, and the south-western from May till October. Variable winds and considerable atmospheric disturbance mark the transition from one monsoon to the other. Notwithstanding its low latitude, the temperature is generally much less oppressive than in India. On the western coast it varies but slightly throughout the year, and the atmosphere in this part of the island, especially during the prevalence of the south-west monsoon, is exceedingly moist. The eastern and northern parts are hotter and drier. The climate of the hill country is temperate and healthy. The most unhealthy districts are those situated at the foot of, and surrounding the central mountain region. The rainfall is considerable, the greatest quantity of rain falling about the setting in of the south-west monsoon, but heavy downpours occur at intervals throughout the year, even the dry season being interrupted by refreshing showers, March and April are the hottest months of the year.

The chief production of the mineral kingdom is plumbago, which is largely exported. Ores of iron and manganese are pretty generally diffused, and nitre, alum and salt are also obtained. The island yields also numerous gems, as amethysts, rubies, sapphires, cat's-eyes, garnets, &c. The pearl fishery in the Gulf of Manaar, on the north-west coast of Ceylon, was formerly the most productive in the world, but for many years past, no pearls have been obtained to speak of. The manufacture of salt, which is a Government monopoly, is confined to particular localities. Hambantota on the south coast, and Publam to the north of Colombo, are the chief salt producing places. Much salt is also made in the vicinity of Jaffna. The vegetation is rich and varied. All the plants and fruits of the main-land flourish freely, with others which are not so well known in India.

The chief vegetable productions besides paddy (rice), grown chiefly in the lowlands, are the cocoanut, coffee and cinnamon, which form the main source of wealth to the island. The cocoanut palm is found mostly in the maritime districts of the west and south. The cinnamon plant is cultivated extensively on the western coast, chiefly in the neighborhood of Colombo. The plantations of coffee are situated mostly upon the mountain slopes, and in the lofty valleys of the interior. A considerable amount of European energy, skill and capital have of late years been brought to bear upon the production in Ceylon of this useful article of commerce. About 1,000,000 cwt. of coffee, the produce of the Ceylon plantations, are exported yearly to the European and other markets.

The forests contain valuable timber trees, as satin-wood, jack-wood, calamander, ebony and others. Cotton and sugar-cane can be grown, but are not cultivated to any extent. Tobacco is cultivated in the northern parts, where also the black palmyra abounds, and is largely exported. Potatoes and other European vegetables are grown in the Kandyan country.

The government of Ceylon is entirely separate from that of India. Ceylon is a crown colony, and is administered by a governor appointed by the Queen, assisted by an executive council of five members, and a legislative council of fifteen (including the executive).

For administrative purposes the island is divided into six provinces, viz., the western, central, southern, eastern, north-western and northern, each under the control of a Government Agent. The provinces are again subdivided into districts, over each of which an Assistant Government Agent is appointed. There is a supreme, civil and criminal court, and district courts of the chief stations of the several provinces, viz., Colombo, Kandy, Galle, Batticaloa, Kurungalla and Jaffna or Jaffnapatam.

The means of internal communication are good, the island being traversed in most parts by excellent roads. A railway connects Colombo with the mountain capital Kandy, and has been extended into the coffee producing districts of the Central Province.

The population of the island according to a census taken in 1871 was 2,405,287. The inhabitants consist principally of native Cinghalese in the western, north-western, central and southern provinces, and Tamils in the northern and eastern. Besides these, there are in all the large towns, numbers of people of mixed (European and native) origin, who are designated Burghers or Eurasians. In addition also to the Tamils, who are permanently resident in the country, there is a large floating population of immigrants from the coast of India, who are engaged in the coffee cultivation and other industrial pursuits in Ceylon. Mahomedans of Arab descent are found scattered throughout the island, engaged chiefly as traders. The Weddas, an aboriginal and savage race, inhabit the remote jungles of the interior and subsist mainly upon the products of the chase.

The chief towns are Colombo, the capital and seat of Government, situated on the western coast near the mouth of the Kalany-Ganga, population about 100,000. Colombo harbour is only capable of receiving small vessels. Galle, or Point de Galle is the chief town in the southern province, and the port of call for all the mail steamers proceeding to Calcutta, China and Australia or homewards. Trincomallee on the north-east coast, has a fine harbour, but little used, except by the ships of the Royal Navy. It was formerly the seat of the Government agency of the eastern province. Jaffna, or Jaffnapatam, on a peninsula in the extreme north of Ceylon, is the capital of the northern province. Kandy, the chief town of the central province, 72 miles from Colombo, was the capital of the island at the time of its conquest by the British. It is situated in a valley at an elevation of about 1,700 feet above the sea level, near it is Peradeniya, with its satin-wood bridge over the Mahawila-Ganga, and its pretty botanical gardens. Other places of some importance are Kalutara (Caltura), Negombo a little to the north of Colombo, and Putlam on the western coast. Matara and Hambantota on the southern, and Batticaloa the residence of the Government agent of the eastern province, on the east coast. In the interior are Nuwara Eliya, the sanitarium of the island, situated on a plain 6,200 feet above the sea. Kurunegalla, the chief town of the north-western province, Gampolla, Matalle and Badulla.

The first settlement Europeans in Ceylon was made by the Portuguese in the early par of the 16th century. In the following century the Portuguese were deprived of their possessions in the island by the Dutch, whose settlements fell into the hands of the English in 1796, when Ceylon was annexed to the Presidency of Madras. Shortly afterwards in 1801 it was made into a separate colony.

THE STRAITS SETTLEMENTS AND ADEN.

The Straits Settlements, comprising a total area of about 1,600 square miles and containing a population of about 206,000 souls, consist of the islands of Singapore and Penang, off the coast of the Malay Peninsula, together with a considerable tract of country in the neighbourhood of Malacca, on the coast between Singapore and Penang, and a tract of smaller area known as the Wellesley Province, on the same coast and adjoining Penang. They were all formerly regarded as dependencies of the Bengal Government, but now form a crown colony, with an administration quite independent of that of India. The chief authority is vested in a Governor appointed by the Queen, as in the case of Ceylon, assisted by an executive council and a legislative council. The several settlements are under the control of Lieutenant-Governors, who are also members of the contral, executive and legislative assemblies. The following is a brief account of them :

PENANG, OR PULO PENANG.—(Betel-nut Island) called also Prince of Wales' Island, is situated between 5° 15′ and 5° 30′ North Latitude, and in Longitude 100° 15′ E., off the western coast of the Malay peninsula, and separated from the peninsula by a strait about two miles in breadth at its narrowest part. The island is 16 miles long, and from 8 to 12 miles broad, and comprises an area of 165 square miles, with a population of some 40,000 souls. The interior of Penang rises into hills of considerable elevation, nearly 2,500 feet above sea level, running from north to south, which divide the island into two nearly equal portions. The plain country on the eastern side of the hills, is the most thickly inhabited part, on this side is situated fort Cornwallis.

The climate is relaxing and enervating, owing to the excessive humidity of the atmosphere conjoined with great heat. Except in unusually dry years, a month does not pass without more or less rain, and the usual yearly rainfall ranges from 60 to 90 inches. January and February are the driest months. There is no cold season to invigorate the system after the oppressive heat, for this reason the climate is a trying one to Europeans. The mornings and nights are cool throughout the year, and fogs, so prevalent on the opposite coast, that of Province Wellesley, do not occur except at the base of the hills. The southerly wind is considered unhealthy, but is fortunately rare, while the northern is refreshing and pleasant.

Fruits are obtained in abundance on the island and pine-apples grow wild.

Penang was ceded to the British in 1786, by the chief of the adjacent territory of Queddah.

PROVINCE WELLESLEY—Is a small strip of country about 35 miles in length and 4 in breadth, on the Queddah coast of the Malay peninsula, opposite to the island of Penang, ceded to the British in 1820 by the chief of Queddah. The chief town of this settlement is George Town. The channel between the main-land and the island of Penang, forms a good natural harbour for shipping. Population about 52,000, area 140 square miles.

Notwithstanding its closeness to Penang, the climate of the settlement differs materially in some respects from that of the island. It is not so much subject to the oppressive calms and damp heated atmosphere, and is therefore cooler, and the air fresher and more invigorating, the maximum heat being 87°. The dry season includes December, January, February and March, and less rain falls on the coast than on the island of Penang.

MALACCA—Is an extensive district situated on the western coast of the Malay peninsula, between Singapore and Penang. It extends for about 40 miles along the coast, and inland to a distance of about 25 miles, comprising an area of about 1,000 square miles. The coast is barren and rocky, and the interior mountainous, with picturesque valleys covered with dense, but roadless forests containing valuable timber. The boundaries of the district have not been laid down, little in fact being known of the interior, or of any other parts, beyond the coast and the borders of the Malacca river, which is navigable during the rainy season for small boats for about 15 miles. Several hot springs are found in the interior, distant about 18 miles from the chief town, one of which is at Sabang near port Lismore, and another in the Naming district. These hot springs are much resorted to by all classes of natives for the cure of various local diseases.

The climate is salubrious, and the temperature equable, the thermometer ranging from 72° to 85° throughout the year. From the end of November to the end of February, the prevailing winds are northerly. It usually rains during the whole of December, but fair weather succeeds in January and February. In April the south-west monsoon commences, and is succeeded by the north-east monsoon in November. The most unhealthy time of the year, is during the Sumatra gales, in August and September. Land winds blow at night throughout the entire year.

The vegetable productions of the country include rice, sago, pepper, cocoanuts and fruits. Tin mines are worked in various parts. The inhabitants, numbering about 54,000, are chiefly Malays, Portuguese and Chinese. Malacca, the chief town, is picturesquely situated at the entrance of the Malacca river, and is one of the oldest European settlements in the East. It was founded by the Portuguese in 1510, and held by them till it was taken by the Dutch in 1642. The Dutch were dispossessed by the English in 1795, but were reinstated in their sovereignty over the territory in 1818. By a treaty, however, concluded with Holland in 1824, Malacca was finally ceded to the English.

SINGAPORE.—An island in the strait of Malacca, situated off the southern extremity of the Malay peninsula. It is separated from the main-land by a narrow channel not more than ¼ of a mile in width. The island is about 27 miles long, and about 11 miles broad, and comprises an area of about 275 square miles.

The surface of Singapore is beautifully diversified with hills, valleys and plains, the whole being covered with a luxuriant vegetation down to the water's edge. The only hills of any considerable elevation is Bukit Tehna, or the tin hill, near the northern coast, and about 1,200 feet in height. The soil is fertile, producing sugar, cotton, coffee, nutmegs, pepper and cocoanuts.

Singapore, the chief town and the seat of Government, is situated on the south side of the island, on both banks of a salt water creek, navigable for lighters and other small craft. It is one of the great emporiums of trade in the East, and possesses a splendid harbour, safe, easily approached and well sheltered. Latitude 1° 17′ 20″ N., Longitude 103° 51′ 18″ E.

The climate of Singapore, though sultry, is not unhealthy. The atmosphere is in general extremely moist, moderating the high temperature and agreeing well with European constitutions. At night, dense fogs spread over the island, and at particular seasons the dews are heavy. The thermometer seldom rises higher than 86°, or falls below 70°, nor does it vary more than four or five degrees in the 24 hours. The north-east monsoon commences about the 15th October, continuing until the setting in of the south-west monsoon, about the middle of April. Rain is never very constant, and the average yearly rainfall is about 90 inches.

The inhabitants, principally Malays and Chinese, number from fifty to sixty thousand, the Chinese being the most numerous as well as the most industrial class.

The town was an ancient Malay settlement. It was taken by the British in 1818, and the sovereignty of Britain was confirmed by a convention with the Dutch in 1825.

ADEN.

Aden is a peninsula situated on the south coast of the Province of Yemen, in Arabia Felix, and is located in Latitude 12°-47' North, and Longitude 45°-10' East.

The British territory includes the peninsula and extends to a creek named Khor Maksar, about two miles to the northward of the defensive work across the Isthmus.

The adjoining peninsula of Jebel Ihsan, generally called little Aden, is within British limits, as is also the harbour. The area of the land may be approximately stated at about thirty-five square miles. The population, exclusive of the garrison, was 19,290 in 1872.

The inhabited peninsula is about fifteen miles in circumference, of an irregular oval form, five miles in its greater, and three in its lesser diameter, and is connected with the continent by a narrow neck of land, 1350 yards in breadth, which is in one place nearly covered by the sea at high spring-tides, in fact, it would be, were it not for a causeway constructed for the convenience of the land traffic, and the passage of the Sheikh Othman aqueduct.

Aden is a large crater formed of lofty precipitous hills, the highest peak of which has an altitude of 1775 feet; these on the exterior sides slope towards the sea, throwing out numerous spurs, which form a series of valleys radiating from a common centre. A gap exists opposite the fortified island of Seerah, the position of which would induce the belief that the circle was at one time complete, but that some convulsion of nature produced the gap.

Aden West-Bay, more generally known as Aden Back-Bay, formed by the peninsula of Jebel Ishsan on the west, and Jebel Shum Shum on the east, is about eight miles broad from east to west, by four miles from north to south, and is divided into two bays by a spit which runs off half a mile to the southward of the small island of Aliyah. The depth of water in the western bay is from three to four fathoms, decreasing gradually towards the shore; across the entrance, four and a half to five fathoms; and at a distance of two miles out side, ten to twelve fathoms.

There are several islands in the inner bay; the principal, Jazira Sawayih, or Slave Island, is 300 feet high, and almost joined to the main land at low water.

The climate during the north-east monsoon, or from October to April, is cool and pleasant, particularly in November, December and January. During the remainder of the year, hot sandy winds, known as shamal, or north, indicating the direction from which they come, prevail within the crater; but on the western or Steamer Point side, the breezes coming directly off the sea, are fairly cool, and that locality is accordingly much preferred by European residents. The months of May and September are especially disagreeable, those being the periods of the change of the monsoons, when the wind almost entirely ceases, and the air is close and oppressive; towards morning a cool and refreshing land breeze generally springs up. Aden is not usually considered by medical men to be an unhealthy station, but it is a well ascertained fact, that long residence impairs the faculties and undermines the constitution of Europeans, and even natives of India suffer from the effects of too prolonged an abode in the settlement.

The town and part of the military cantonment are within the crater, and consequently are surrounded on all sides by hills, save on the eastern side, where a gap exists.

The supply of water which is now plentiful in the settlement, is derived from four sources, viz., wells, aqueducts, tanks and reservoirs, and condensers. The annual rainfall at Aden is very limited, seldom exceeding six or seven inches, as long as the tanks have water in them, the three condensers on the settlement are not worked, from these water is obtainable on an emergency to the extent of 46,600 gallons per diem, should the supply in the tanks and wells fall short at any time. There are, in addition, several condensers belonging to private companies, who sell water to the public.

The garrison and camp followers number 3,500. Europeans live in Aden in exactly the same manner as in India, but the actual expenditure incurred, is about 20 per cent. in excess of what it would be in Bombay, and consequently still greater than what would be required in the mofussil. Wines, spirits, beer and European stores are somewhat cheaper than in India, owing to Aden being a free port, but unless private individuals import their own requirements, such articles can only be purchased from the local shop-keepers at about Indian prices.

The settlement is presided over by an officer who is styled Political Resident, and who resides at Steamer Point, but his office is in the crater. The Resident has two assistants, and there is a cantonment magistrate, who is also ex officio, an assistant. These officers perform all the civil, revenue, judicial and ministerial duties of the settlement. Aden is politically subject to the Government of Bombay, and is considered for legal purposes as part of British India.

Since its capture in 1839 by the British, great attention has been paid to the fortifying of Aden, and all the latest improvements, in engineering and artillery, have been applied to render it almost impregnable.

The port of Aden is in charge of a Conservator, and is regulated by the Indian Ports Act. Since the opening of the Suez Canal, the visits of ships of foreign navies are becoming more frequent yearly, necessitating a vessel of war of some size being always stationed at Aden.

The Arab tribes we have to deal with at Aden are the following, viz :—

The Abdali tribe, inhabiting a district lying in a north north-westerly direction from Aden, called Lahej, about thirty-three miles long and eight broad. Al-Hautah, the capital, where the Sultan resides, is situated about twenty-one miles from the Barrier-Gate. The population of this district is about 15,000. The Abdalis are the most civilised but least warlike of all the tribes in south-western Arabia.

The Fadhli tribe, inhabiting two large districts, with a sea-board of 100 miles, extending eastward from the boundary of the Abdali. Shograh, their chief sea port, is situated 60 or 70 miles from Aden. The Fadhlis are proud, warlike and independent, possessing in a high degree the virtues and vices of the true Bedawin. Their number of fighting men is about 6,700.

The Akrabi tribe, inhabiting a district, the coast line of which stretches from Bir Ahmed to Ras Amran. This people have a high reputation for courage.

There are other tribes, but as they do not reside in the immediate vicinity of Aden, it is unnecessary to refer to them.

The language of the place is Arabic, but other Asiatic tongues, as Hindustani, Persian, Gujarati, Sindi, &c., as well as several European languages, are spoken and understood.

THE ISLAND OF PERIM.

Attached to the Government of Aden is the island of Perim, known among the Arabs as Mayoon. It is situated in the Straits of Babel Mandeb, a mile and a half from the Arabian, and eleven miles from the African coast; it has an excellent and capacious harbour, about a mile and a half in length, half a mile in breadth, and with a varying depth of from four to six fathoms. The highest point of the island is 245 feet above the level of the sea. The island was first taken possession of by the East India Company in 1799, but was then deemed untenable as a military position; it was re-occupied in the beginning of 1857, a light house erected, and quarters built for a detachment of native infantry, fifty strong, who now garrison the place under the command of a British officer. This detachment is relieved every two months.

All endeavours to procure water have failed, and but a scanty supply is procurable from the adjacent coasts; a condensing apparatus now supplies this want, as at Aden.

The only other British possessions in the vicinity of Arabia, are, the Massah Islands in the Bay of Tajurra, the island of Eibat near Zaila, and the Kooria Mooria Islands on the Mahra coast of Arabia. They are only valuable for the guano deposits which are found upon them.

GLOSSARY OF INDIAN TERRITORIAL DESIGNATIONS.

ARAKAN.—A tract of country about 300 miles in length, situated to the east of the Bay of Bengal, between the parallels of 18° and 21° 30′ N., and meridians of 92° and 95° E., under the British Burmah jurisdiction, comprising the districts of Akyab, Northern Arakan, Kyoukhpyoo and Sandoway.—(See p. 87 and 88.)

BAGHELKHAND.—The country of the Baghelas, embracing the native states of Rewah, Nagode, Maihar, Sohawal and Koti, under the Central India Agency.—(See p. 112.)

BARI DOAB.—The plain country between the Sutlej and Ravi, and the Bias and Ravi rivers.—Doab signifies two waters.—(See p. 23.)

BEHAR.—A province under the Bengal jurisdiction, comprising the divisions of Patna and Bhagalpur.—(See. p. 51-52 and 55.)

BENGAL.—A Province under the Bengal jurisdiction, comprising the Burdwan, Rajshahye and Cooch Behar, and Dacca divisions.—(See p. 47-48-49-50 and 55.)

BENGAL PRESIDENCY.—The chief Presidency of British India. All territory not included within the Bombay and Madras Presidencies, has been hitherto deemed as coming within the limits of this third great division of India, designated 'The Bengal Presidency.' This designation, though still maintained for convenience, is, however, now regarded as obsolete, considering the many distinct provinces, and independent territorial jurisdictions which it now embraces.—(See p. 5.)

BERAR.—The country assigned by the Nizam of Hyderabad to the British, and known as the Hyderabad Assigned Districts, or Berar.—(See p. 95 and 96.)

BHATTIANA.—So called from having been the possession of the Bhattis of Rajput descent. A tract comprised within the British district of Sirsa and the northern portion of the Bickaneer state, between the paralells of 29° 12′ and 30° 30′, and meridians of 73° 0′ and 75° 20′.

BUNDELKHAND.—The country of the Bundelas. A tract bounded on the west and north-west by the Gwalior state; on the north-east by the Jumna River which separates it from the British districts of Etawah, Cawnpore, Fatehpur and Allahabad; on the east by Baghelkhand, and on the south by the British districts of Saugor, Damoh and Jubbulpore.—(See p. 112-114 and 115.)

BHABAR.—A belt of waterless jungle, formed of boulders and the debris of the lower ranges of the Himalayas, extending from four to fourteen miles in breadth, and lying between the Tarai and the sub-Himalayas.—(See p. 36.)

BABRIAWAR.—A district in the peninsula of Kattywar, province of Gujarat, named from the Babria tribe of coolies who inhabit it, lying to the west of the Gohelwar district.

BHAKAR.—A tract of rugged hill country near Mount Abu, to the east of the Sirohee state, inhabited by Grassias, a half-blood tribe between Bhils and Rajputs.—(See p. 105.)

CARNATIC.—See Karnatik.

CHHATTISGARH.—The south-eastern division of the Central Provinces, comprising the districts of Raipur, Bilaspur and Sambalpur, between the parallels of 80° 30′ and 83° 15′ N., and meridians of 16° 50′ and 23° 10′ E., bounded on the north by Rewah native state, and province Chota-Nagpore of the Bengal jurisdiction; on the south by Bastar native state, and on the west by the districts of Chanda, Bhandara, Balaghat, Seoni and Mandla of the Central Provinces.—(See p. 76.)

CHOTA-NAGPORE.—A province under the Bengal jurisdiction, comprising the districts of Hazaribagh, Lohardugga, Singhbhoom, and Manbhoom, and the Garhjat states of Chang-Bakhar, Koria, Sarguja, Jashpur, Udaipur, Gangpur and Bonai.—(See p. 53 and 55.)

CHAPPAN.—A stretch of rugged hill country and jungle in the south-east corner of the Oodeypore state, Rajputana.—(See p. 105.)

CHAUMELA.—A strip of country in the extreme south-east corner of Rajputana.—(See p. 105.)

CIRCARS.—See Northern Circars.

DECCAN.—In its usual acceptation implies the tract of country in Southern India, situated between the Nerbudda and Kistna rivers. Properly speaking, however, it includes the whole of the territory lying south of the Vindhya mountains which separate it from Hindustan on the north, and between the Eastern and Western Ghats.

DERAJAT OR DAMAN, the border.—The country stretching between the Suliman range of hills and the Indus, and so called from the three towns, Dera Ismail Khan, Dera Ghazi Khan and Dera Fateh Khan lying within it.—(See p. 22.)

DUARS.—Passes leading from the Bhutan mountains into the Darrang and Kamrup districts of Assam, including the country on the British border to their south. There are eleven bordering on Kooch Behar and British territory, between the rivers Tista and Monas, five on the north frontier of the Kamrup district, and two on that of the Darrang district.

GODWAR.—A small tract of hilly country lying between Sirohee native state and Merwara, on the boundary between the Oodeypore and Jodhpore states in Rajputana.

GOHELWAR.—A district in the peninsula of Kattywar, province Gujarat, named from the Gohel Rajputs by whom it is principally peopled, lying south of the Ahmedabad district, and on the east of districts Babriawar and Kattywar.

GONDWANA.—Or the land of the Gond race; an extensive, imperfectly defined hilly tract of Central India, it may however be considered as lying between Latitudes 19° 50′ and 24° 30′ N., and Longitudes 77° 40′ and 87° 30′ E. This name is now regarded as obsolete.

GUJARAT.—An extensive province of the Bombay Presidency, comprehending within its limits the peninsula of Kattywar, the whole territories of the Gaikhwar and of his tributaries, together with the petty independent states, in Mahi Kanta and Rewa Kanta, and bounded on the north by the Gulf of Cutch and the territories of Mallani, Marwar and Meywar of the Rajputana Agency, on the south by the Gulf of Cambay and the British districts of Khandesh and Surat of the Bombay Presidency, on the east by the Khandesh district, and Malwa of the Central India Agency, and on the west by the Arabian Sea.—(See p. 143, 148 and 154.)

GARHWAL, BRITISH AND NATIVE.—A tract of country in the Himalayas, bounded on the north by the native state of Bashahr of the Punjab, and Hundes or south-western Tibet; on the east by the British district of Kumaun; on the south by Rohilkhand, and on the west by the British district of Dehra Dun. The native portion is the state of Tehri, the British portion is the district of Garhwal in the Kumaun division of the North-Western Provinces.—(See p. 34 and 36.)

HALLAR OR HALLAWAR.—a district in the peninsula of Kattywar, province Gujarat, named from the Halla tribe of Rajputs who inhabit it. It is bounded on the north by the Gulf of Cutch; on the north-east by the districts of Machu-Kanta and Jhallawar; on the east by the district of Kattywar; on the south by the districts of Kattywar and Sorath, and on the west by the district of Okhmandal.

HARAOTI—A tract comprised within the native states of Boondee, Kotah and Jhallawar in the Rajputana Agency.—(See p. 103.)

HARRIANA.—A tract comprised in the British district of Hissar, and the northern portion of the Bickaneer state, lying between Latitude 28° 33′ and 30° 0′ N., and Longitude 752° 0′ and 76° 22′ E.

HUNDES OR NARI KHORSUM.—The south-western portion of Thibet lying to the north of Garhwal and Kumaun.

JAINTIA HILLS—A hilly tract adjoining the Khasi hills on the east, and comprised in the district named Khasi and Jaintia hills.—(See p. 65 and 68.)

JAUNSAR BAWAR.—A tract comprising the northern sub-division of district Dehra Dun, in the North-Western Provinces.—(See p. 36.)

JACH OR CHAJ DOAB.—The plain country between the Jhelum and Chenab rivers of the Punjab.—(See p. 23.)

JHALLAWÁD.—A district in the peninsula of Kattywar, province Gujarat, named from the Jhalla tribe of Rajputs who principally people it. It extends over the north-eastern part of the peninsula; on the south and south-west are the districts of Kattywar and Hallar, and on the west is the district of Machukanta, area 2,914, square miles.

JULLUNDUR DOAB.—The plain country between the Bias and Sutlej rivers of the Punjab.—(See p. 23.)

KANARA.—A tract stretching along the western coast of India from the Portuguese territory of Goa down to the district of Malabar. It is divided into north and south, the former portion naming the district of Kanara in the Bombay Presidency, the latter being the district of the same name in the Madras Presidency.—(See p. 122 and 145.)

KARNATIC.—A division of Southern India confined to the eastern side of the Madras Presidency. The limits were probably at no time very accurately or clearly defined. It is said to commence at the southern limit of the Kistna district, and to extend down to Cape Comorin.

KATTYWAR.—The name of a peninsula comprehended in the province of Gujarat, and lying to the west. On the north it is bounded by the Gulf of Cutch, on the west and south by the Arabian Sea, and on the east by the Gulf of Cambay.—(See p. 153.)

KHASI HILLS.—A tract of hilly country lying between the Assam districts of Kamrup and Sylhet, and between the Garo and Jaintia hills. This tract and the Jaintia hills comprise a district in Assam.—(See p. 65 and 68.)

KONKAN.—A narrow tract in the Presidency of Bombay, comprised in the districts of Thana, Kolaba and Ratnagiri, and stretching along the coast from the native state of Sawantwari, on the frontier of Goa, to the Daman river on the north, a length of about 330 miles, with a breadth varying from 25 to 50 miles.—(See p. 154.)

MACHU KANTA.—A district in the peninsula of Kattywar, province of Gujarat, named from the river Machu which flows through its centre to the Gulf of Cutch, lying to the west of the Jhallawad district.

MAHI KANTA.—A tract lying on the north-east of the province of Gujarat, extending from the Ahmedabad district to the Rajputana frontier.—(See p. 153.)

MALABAR.—A tract naming a district of the Madras Presidency, bounded on the north by Kanara and Coorg, on the east by Mysore native state and district Coimbatore, on the south by Cochin native state, and on the west by the sea.—(See p. 122.)

MALLANI.—A tract within the territory of the Jodhpore native state, lying on the south-west of Rajputana, bounded on the north-west by Jeysulmere native state, on the east and south by Marwar, and on the west by Sind.—(See p. 102 and 103.)

MALWA.—A tract in Central India, bounded on the west by the Aravalli range, on the south by the Vindhya chain of hills, on the east by Bundelkhand, and included in the southern portions of the Rajputana and Central India Agencies.—(See p. 112 and 115.)

MARWAR.—Another name for Jodhpore native state in the Rajputana Agency.—(See p. 102.)

MERGUI ARCHIPELAGO.—A large cluster of islands, commencing in the north with Tavoy Island, about 13° 13′ N. Latitude, and stretching southward beyond the limits of British territory. The majority are mountainous, the height of some being 3,000 feet. Maingy Island in 12° 32′ N. Latitude, and 98° 7′ E. Longitude, can be seen for eleven miles, and the southern peak of St. Matthew's Island, 10° 52′ N. Latitude, and 98° E. Longitude, for thirteen miles. Some of them are clothed with dense vegetation, and they are but sparsely inhabited, a few Burmese and Karengs having settled on one or two. They are probably rich in minerals. The Caoutchouc tree is asserted to grow in great abundance on the Islands, which are, however, infested by snakes, rhinoceros, tigers and deer.—(See p. 89.)

MERWARA.—A narrow strip of hill country connected with the district of Ajmere, about one hundred miles in length, and fifteen to twenty miles broad, lying between North Latitude 25° 23′ and 26° 11′, and East Longitude 73° 47′ and 74° 30′.—(See p. 101.)

MEYWAR.—Another name for Oodeypore native state in the Rajputana Agency—(See p. 102 and 105.)

MEYWAR HILL TRACTS.—A rugged bit of country in the south-west corner of the Oodeypore state, Rajputana Agency, covered with forest.—(See p. 105.)

MINA KHERAR.—A tract, rugged and hilly, in the north-east corner of the Oodeypore state in the Rajputana Agency.—(See p. 105.)

NAGA HILLS.—A hilly district of that name in the province of Assam.—(See p. 65 and 68.) Also the country extending from North Cachar as far as the Dihing river in the extreme eastern part of Assam.

NIMAR OR NIMAWAR, British and Native.—A tract in Western India, about 130 miles in length from east to west, apparently denominated from the town of the same name in the native portion. It comprises a large portion of the valley of the Nerbudda, and of the Vindhya mountains, which enclose it on the north, and of the Satpuras, which enclose it on the south. The British portion is the district of that name in the Nerbudda division of the Central Provinces.—(See p. 75.)

NORTHERN CIRCARS.—An antiquated division of the Madras Presidency between Latitude 15° 40′ and 20° 17′ N., and Longitude 79° 12′ and 85° 20′ E., about 470 miles in length. The Northern Circars formerly comprised the tracts of Chicacole Rajahmundry. Ellore, Condapilly and Guntoor, the whole of which are now included in the Kistna, Godavari, Vizagapatam and Ganjam districts of the Madras Presidency.—(See p. 119.)

OKHMANDAL.—A small district in the peninsula of Kattywar, province Gujarat, at the north-west angle of the peninsula.

ORISSA.—A province under the Bengal jurisdiction, comprising the Orissa division, consisting of the districts of Balasore, Cuttack and Pooree, and nineteen tributary states.—(See p. 53, 54 and 55.)

PATAR.—A remarkable plateau on the eastern side of Rajputana.—(See p. 105.)

RECHNA DOAB.—The plain country lying between the Ravi and Chenab rivers of the Punjab.—(See p. 23.)

REWA KANTA.—A tract lying along the north-east of the Gujarat province, of the Bombay Presidency, south of Mahikanta, and between the rivers Tapti and Mahi.—(See p. 153.)

ROHILKHAND.—An extensive tract, mostly plain, bounded on the west and south by the river Ganges, on the south-east by Oudh, on the north-east by Kumaun and Nepal native state, and on the north by British Garhwal, comprised within the districts of Bijnor, Moradabad, Bareilly, Budaun, Shajahanpur and the Tarai, under the title of the Rohilkhand division. Rohilkhand was ceded to the British by the Nawab of Oudh in 1801.—(See p. 30)

SHAIKHAWATI.—A tract comprising the northern portion of the Jeypore native state, in Rajputana.—(See p. 102 and 103.)

SIND, (from Sindhu, a collection of waters).—The northern province of the Bombay Presidency, bounded by the Rann of Cutch on the south, by Rajputana on the east, by the Punjab on the north-east, by Baluchistan on the north and west, and by the Arabian Sea on the south-west.—(See p. 146 and 154.)

SIND SAGAR DOAB.—The plain country between the Indus and the Chenab rivers on the south and the Indus and the Jhelum, rivers on the north.—(See p. 23.)

SIRHIND.—An extensive tract of the Punjab jurisdiction, stretching east and west, from the extreme north-east corner of the Bahawalpur native state to the Umballa district, and north and south from the river Sutlej to Harriana, about 220 miles in length from east to west, and 160 in breadth from north to south.

SORATH.—A district in the peninsula of Kattywar, province Gujarat, Bombay Presidency, the most southern of the peninsula, bounded by Hallar district on the north, by Babriawar on the east, and by Kattywar on the north-east.

SUNDARBANS.—The southern portion of the Delta of the Ganges in the Bengal jurisdiction This tract may be described as a crowded cluster of densely wooded small marshy islands separated by narrow channels and formed by the deposition of the enormous quantity of earth swept down by the Ganges. This alluvial archipelago is about 200 miles in length, and about 75 miles in breadth. An area of 5,340 square miles, is almost totally irreclaimable.—(See p. 46 and 56.)

TARAI.—A long strip of marshy jungle, stretching along the foot of the sub-Himalayan ranges, and between them and the northern plains of India. A deadly malaria arises from the whole region, rendering it almost uninhabitable by man, and dangerous to traverse between the months of April and October.—(See p. 30, 36 and 181.)

TENASSERIM.—The southern portion of the British Burmah province, stretching along the eastern coast of the Bay of Bengal, and embracing the districts of Amherst, Tavoy and Mergui, in length about 500 miles.—(See p. 86 and 88.)

THAR, THE.—The great sandy desert of north-western India, extending from the Aravallis to the Sutlej and the Indus rivers, and from the left bank of the lower Indus in Sind, to the north-eastern limit of Rajputana, a length of some 500 miles. This desert is called by the natives Thar, Thall, or Dhat. In Hindu geography it is termed marus thulli, or the region of death.—(See p. 104.)

RELIGIONS AND PEOPLES OF INDIA.

BRIEF GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

ABOUT three-fourths of the vast population of India comprising upwards of two hundred and forty-two millions, (See p. 9 and 10,) are Hindus professing the religion of Brahma in its many different forms, and although sub-divided into many sects, are more or less exclusively devoted to that form of worship.

The doctrines of the more ancient religion of the Hindus are contained in the Vedas, or four sacred books, each composed of two parts, one comprising forms of worship, the other, moral and religious instruction. These Vedas are of very high antiquity, being supposed to date from the fourteenth century before the Christian era. Their primary doctrine teaches Theism, or the worship of a self-existent Supreme Being, to whom all are subject, 'There is in truth but one Deity, the Supreme Spirit, the Lord of the Universe, whose work is the universe'.

The Puranas, the other sacred books of the Hindus, as well as the Institutes of Menu, are compositions of later date, and are the exponents of modern Brahminism. The Puranas are eighteen in number, and were mostly written in support of the doctrines of particular sects, and the supremacy of the priesthood. They are, for the most part legendary in their character. The pure Theism of the ancient Hindu faith as defined in the Vedas, has become developed into an elaborate polytheistic system, the most gigantic and degrading. Brahma, the creative principle, Vishnu, the preserving principle, and Siva, the destroying principle, being regarded as a Triune manifestation of the divinity, and with other personified attributes and energies, having been made the objects of worship in an infinite variety of forms. Subordinate to these are many lesser divinities regarded as goddesses; there is a goddess of learning and eloquence (Saraswati), a goddess of wealth (Lakshmi), the goddesses Parvati, Bhowani or Durga, names representing the acting powers of evil and destruction, as well as others. Of the Hindu sects, the most influential and numerous are the followers of Siva and Vishnu. The worship of Siva prevails mostly among the members of the upper classes, especially in Mysore and the Maratha provinces, while that of Vishnu prevails among the Hindus of Bengal, the North-Western Provinces and Oudh. A large portion of the sacred writings of the Hindus is occupied with the history of the various incarnations (avatars) of this latter deity. The votaries of Siva and Vishnu are distinguished by certain colored marks on the forehead, those of the Siva sect being horizontal, while those of the Vishnuvites are perpendicular.

The leading dogmas of the Brahminical faith are, the supremacy of the priesthood, and metempsychosis or the transmigration of the soul after death. Pilgrimages to remote and holy places, and penances and offerings to the priesthood, are held in high esteem; the avoidance of impure or forbidden food, especially the flesh of the cow or bull, which is considered sacred, and the preservation of caste, are among the most important moral duties enjoined on the Hindu. In no country does the religion of the inhabitants appear so prominent in every act as in Hindustan. It pervades the entire frame of civil society, and mixes itself up with every concern of life, public, private or domestic. The institution of caste, so characteristic of Hindu society throughout nearly the whole country, by which all classes remain, from father to son, occupying the same pursuits and positions in life, is nowhere pursued to such (often arbitrary and merciless) ramifications as in India. Purity of caste being incapable of acquisition, and therefore to be preserved at all hazards and under the most trying circumstances.

In the outset the Hindus were divided into four great classes or castes, the Brahmans or sacerdotal class; the Kshetriyas, warriors and rulers; Vaisiyas, capitalists, traders and farmers, and Sudras, laborers, artizans, and menial servants. These great divisions though hereditary, impassable and indefeasible, are now, however, purely theoretical, there being, practically an immense number of various castes, whose members intermarry only among themselves, and abstain from associating with those of other castes. Every caste and sub-division of a caste, forming a little distinct society in the general community.

The Brahmans and Kshetriyas are regarded as greatly superior to the rest of the population, and are distinguished by wearing a certain cord termed 'the thread.' The following passages denote what obsequious reverence the Brahmans claim for their order: 'A Brahman, whether learned or ignorant, is a powerful divinity.' (Inst. of Menu.) 'Those excellent Brahmans who are guilty of such crimes as theft, are offenders against themselves, not others.'—'Brahmans are masters of the Kshetriyas, Vaishiyas and Sudras; they are masters of one another, and to be worshipped, being earthly gods.' (Padma Purana.) 'Whatever exists in the universe is all in effect, though not in form, the wealth of the Brahman, since the Brahman is entitled to it all, by his primogeniture and eminence of birth.'—'The Brahman eats but his own food, wears but his own apparel, and bestows but his own in alms. He alone deserves to possess the whole earth.' (Ibid.)

The military profession is held to be nearly as honorable as the sacerdotal, and numerous Brahmans are found filling its ranks, while the mercantile classes are regarded with much less consideration.

The spread of education is gradually undermining the influence of caste prejudices.

Other forms of religion are those of the Buddhists, Jains, Sikhs and Mahomedans; the last it is unnecessary to refer to, beyond stating, that they consist chiefly of two sects, the Shiahs and the Sunnis; the former regarding Ali as the successor of Mahomet, and equal to him in dignity, and who reject tradition; the latter insisting on the supremacy of Mahomet over all created beings, and acknowledging tradition. The Mahomedan religion was founded in Arabia, and introduced into India by the Arabs in the sixth and seventh centuries.

Buddhism, which now prevails over all Central and Eastern Asia, appears to have originated, and at one time to have extensively prevailed in Hindustan. It is believed that Buddhism, and Brahmanism are but two offsets from a primitive religion, which once prevailed over the whole of Asia beyond the Indus. Being opposed to the polytheism of the Brahmans, Buddhism became subjected to considerable persecution at their hands, and is now all but extinct in India, it is, however, professed by a large number of the inhabitants of Arakan, Burmah, Bhutan Nepal and the island of Ceylon. Though almost extinguished in Hindustan, the religion of Buddha, the 'wise', the 'enlightened,' is still, numerically speaking, the prevailing religion of the world. It has now been in existence for nearly 2,500 years, and its adherents are estimated at upwards of 400 millions, or more than a fourth of the human race. The Buddhists, while they reject the multitudinous pantheon of the Hindus, admit an indefinite number of incarnations of Buddh, who is supposed to animate in succession the bodies of their chief Lamas or priests. They believe in the eternity of matter, and the supremacy of intelligence as a property of matter. They deny the authority of the sacred books of the Hindus, do not acknowledge caste, and have no respect for fire, but have great regard for animal life, and live much in monasteries. Buddhism is practically a system of Atheism and Nihilism. The Nirvána, to which the Buddhist aspires, is absolute NOTHING. Buddhas are beings (of whom there may be many), who have raised themselves by austerities of all kinds to a state of apathy, and then have evolved certain doctrines and sacred books. The founder of Buddhism was Sakya Muni or Gotama, who died 543 B. C. The sacred books of the Buddhists are called TRI-PITAKA, (three caskets,)

The religion of the Jains and Sikhs is briefly described in the following alphabetical list of the principal classes of the different peoples and tribes inhabiting India.

There are marked differences in appearance among the native races in different parts of the country, and these depend partly on race, and partly, no doubt, on climate. The less accessible parts are still inhabited by people hardly removed from the lowest forms of savage life, while the coast, the plains, and great river valleys have been the seat of civilization from time immemorial. The inhabitants of Northern, North-Western and Central India, generally, are handsome, tall, of fair complexion, well developed, honest, manly and of more than average intellect. They make excellent soldiers and are ingenious in certain manufactures and handicrafts. The same general description applies, with some marked exceptions, to the inhabitants of the mountain districts in other parts of India, though they are less tall. On the other hand, the people dwelling in the lower provinces of Bengal, in the river valleys near the mouths of streams, and in the Deccan, are lower in stature, darker in colour, less developed physically, less sincere and honest, and less favourable specimens of the human family. All the races, however, are simple in their habits, active, capable of enduring much fatigue, and much attached to their homes. Of the different races, the Bengalis, though weak in body, and wanting in moral courage, are, intellectually, the most capable of considerable and rapid advancement in the ordinary arts of civilized life, and there is a certain amount of cunning natural to them, which makes up for their timidity.

List of a few of the principal Indian Peoples and Tribes.

ABARS.—A wild mountain tribe occupying a tract of country to the north of Upper Assam. The centre of the tract is about Latitude 28° 10′ N., and Longitude 95° 20′ E.

AKHAS.—A wild tribe inhabiting the mountainous country, situated on the northern boundary of Assam, and the eastern boundary of Bhutan. The centre of the tract is about Latitude 27° 10′ N., and Longitude 92° 40′ E.

ARABS.—In Bombay chiefly, generally traders from the Red Sea and Persian Gulf. A great number are also to be found in the Nizam's territory or Hyderabad, who are permanently settled there, and are employed chiefly as mercenaries in the military forces of that state.

ARMENIANS.—Chiefly refugees from former Persian or Turkish persecution, and generally merchants and tradesmen settled in the principal towns and cities of India.

BADAKS or BHADAKS.—Hereditary thieves inhabiting the forests of Northern Oudh, and the banks of the Chambal river. They lead a nomadic life and have few Hindu prejudices.

BAJIKARS.—The gipseys and jugglers of India, chiefly met with in Upper India.

BANIAS.—The Hindu trading and banking class, the most influential as well as the most despised of natives, quiet and well behaved, but fond of litigation.

BANJARAS or LADANAS.—The carriers of the country, chiefly of grain, they own immense herds of bullocks and live generally in the open; the railways have reduced this class considerably, and their existence in the future is only a question of time. Their dress and usages are peculiar.

BANRAS.—Tribes separated from the Newars of Nepal, and following many of the customs of the Bhutias.

BHATS.—Wandering minstrels found in Gujarat and Upper India, and exercising much influence over the population, but especially over the Rajputs.

BHATTIS.—A predatory tribe of Rajput descent, inhabiting Bhattiana and the desert in Rajputana, from the Sirsa and Hissar districts up to the Indus.

BHILS.—Rude native tribes supposed to be the aboriginal people of Central India and Gujarat, now inhabiting the mountainous parts of Gujarat, Khandesh and Malwa, and the hills along the Nerbudda and Tapti rivers.

BORAS.—A trading sect of Mahomedans largely scattered over Gujarat and the Deccan, of supposed Arab descent, and resembling Jews in features and character. They are in general, industrious, wealthy, and influential members of society.

CHARANS.—A race of carriers of heavy goods, and grain, also cattle dealers; they are sometimes hired by travellers as an escort in the wilder parts of India.

COLES.—Aboriginal tribes inhabiting the northern part of Orissa. They are also called Hos, and are semi-barbarous, but hospitable, and show a love of truth, honesty and a willingness to oblige.

COOLIS.—The aboriginal tribes of Gujarat and Western India. A manly and hard-working people, but ferocious, much addicted to drunkenness, and once formidable robbers.

DAUDPUTRAS (or sons of David).—A fair and handsome Mahomedan race, numbering about 50,000. They crossed the Indus from Shikarpur in the reign of Aurungzebe, and took forcible possession of the country which they now occupy on the left bank of the Sutlej, called Bahawalpur.

DHENWARS.—The husbandmen and fishers of the western districts of Nepal.

GARANGS.—A Buddhist race, leading a pastoral life in Nepal, and shifting their abodes between the mountains and valleys in summer and winter; some are miners and traders.

GAROS.—A purely agricultural people, the inhabitants of the Garo Hills district of Assam, similar to the Mechis or Cacharis. A robust, active, strong and muscular race, capable of enduring a great amount of exertion and fatigue, remarkable for their ugliness and scarcity of beard, generally truthful, easily excitable, and then revengeful, cruel and blood-thirsty.

GONDS.—The aboriginal inhabitants of a part of Central India formerly called Gond wana; they are blood-thirsty, cruel and revengeful, but an athletic and well-looking race, speaking a language radically different from Sanscrit.

GUJARS.—The inhabitants and husbandmen of Gujarat, as well as many parts of Northern India, and the Punjab.

GURKHAS.—A hardy, brave, active and enterprising people, dominant in Nepal and in the hill countries westward. They are of short stature, but make excellent soldiers, and are descendants of the Hindu refugees from Mahomedan invasion, who mingled with the Tartar and Chinese people of the country.

JAINS or JAINAS.—A religious sect dating from the sixth century, numerous in Gujarat, Khandesh, Rajputana and Kanara, professing the doctrines, and supposed to be an offshoot, of the Buddhists, but admitting caste,—which Buddhism rejects,—and the worship of many of the Hindu deities in addition to their own saints, twenty four in number, called Tirthankaras, i.e. those, who by ascetic practices, have crossed the ocean of human existence, whom they regard as superior to the gods. Their priests are of all castes. The Jains have always been a learned people. Both Jains and Buddhists use Pali as their sacred language.

JARIJAS—A fine robust and warlike race, but proud, cruel and dissipated; they are the ruling class in Cutch.

JATS.—A turbulent and very ancient race who probably migrated originally from Turkestan, occupying a great part of the North-Western Provinces and Rajputana. They still retain the warlike and nomadic habits of the people of that region.

JEWS.—Numerous in Western India, found also in Calcutta, and Rangoon. Those of Bombay call themselves Bani-Israel, and are probably descendants of the ten tribes, and of higher consideration than the others. At Cochin they are of two denominations, the Black Jews of very ancient date, and the White Jews, more recent, who regard the others as slaves.

KATARIS or KATADIS.—An ancient race of Northern Konkan, Bombay Presidency, living on the outskirts of the villages, and held in abhorrence by the higher castes of Hindus KATTIS. Natives of the peninsula of Kattywar in Gujarat, considered one of the royal races of India, but now greatly reduced. They are half civilised, and were once robbers and pirates.

KHASIAS.—The inhabitants of the Khasia and Jaintia Hills district of Assam. A short stout and athletic race, affable, gentle and cheerful in disposition, industrious, and capable of enduring much fatigue.

KHONDS.—Tribes inhabiting the hilly districts of Orissa, partly civilised and practising agriculture. An intelligent race, robust and muscular, having a strong love of independence but vindictive, and addicted to drunkenness.

KOTARS.—A peculiar but industrious race, exercising certain handicrafts, and having no caste prejudices. Found in the Nilgiri district.

KUNBIS.—An agricultural tribe inhabiting the south and midland parts of Gujarat.

KURMIS.—A class of cultivators found in the North-Western Provinces, well-known for their industrious and peaceful habits.

MARATHAS.—A numerous and powerful race, bold, active and industrious, who originally occupied the north-western part of the Deccan, but conquered a great part of Northern and Central India, confined now more particularly to the central and southern part of the Bombay Presidency, of which they form the majority of the population. Their power was broken by Ahmadshah, Abdalli, king of Kabul, at the battle of Panipat in 1761.

MARAVAS.—A people of considerable antiquity, inhabiting a tract of country on the extreme southern coast near Cape Comorin.

MARWARIS.—The trading class of Jodhpore or Marwar, found throughout India.

MECHIS, or CACHARIS.—A tribe widely scattered all over north-eastern Bengal and throughout Assam, called Mechis in the former, and Cacharis in the latter. Of migratory habits, able-bodied and well behaved, honest and trustworthy. They make good soldiers and form a strong element in the military and police of those parts, and have no caste prejudices.

MERS.—The inhabitants of the district called Merwara, in the Aravalli Hills of Rajputana (See page 101.) They are descendants of one of the original peoples of India, and are a savage and independent race.

MIKIRS.—A tribe inhabiting the hills in Nowgong, Assam, undoubtedly the most peaceful and industrious of hil tribes. A fine athletic race, but devoid of personal courage.

MOPLAHS, or MAPILAS.—The Mahomedan inhabitants of Malabar, in the Madras Presidency. A wealthy, intelligent and enterprising race, but fanatical and troublesome.

MUGS or MAGHS.—The indigenous people of Arakan, short in stature, hardy, inoffensive and trustworthy, with round, flat faces and a copper complexion.

NAGAS.—Tribes virtually independent, extending from North Cachar as far as the Dihing river in the extreme eastern point of Assam. They all belong to the Indo-Chinese stock speaking various dialects, which differ so much, that their own villages, lying scarcely a day's journey apart, can only hold communication by means of a foreign tongue. The term Naga is probably derived from the Bengali word Nangta, meaning naked, or from the Sanskrit word naga, a snake. The principal clans are the Angamis, the Rengmas and the Kachas, the first named being the most numerous and powerful. An athletic, and by no means a bad looking race, brave and warlike, but also treacherous and vindictive.

NAYARS.—The aristocracy of Malabar, formerly hereditary soldiers, now engaged in handicraft. Numerous and influential.

NAMBURIS.—A class of Brahmans, considered to be aboriginal and very highly regarded, inhabiting southern India.

NAYAKS.—A wild tribe inhabiting the forests between the Mahi and the Nerbudda rivers in Rewakanta, Gujarat.

NEWARS.—The original inhabitants of the fertile parts of Nepal before its conquest by the Gurkhas. They are an industrious, ingenious, peaceable and able-bodied race, chiefly engaged in agriculture, trading and handicraft. They are Buddhists, but do not acknowledge the Lamas of Thibet.—(See page 181.)

OORIYAS.—The original inhabitants of Orissa, from whom the province takes its name. They are a timid, effeminate, dishonest and dissolute race, but industrious.

PAHARIS.—The inhabitants of the mountains, or hill men.

PARSIS.—The descendants of a large colony of fire-worshippers, who left Persia in consequence of Moslem persecution and settled in Bombay, Surat and Gujarat. Many are now rich merchants and land-owners, others are shop-keepers, artizans and domestic servants. They are very hospitable and liberal, especially to their own people.—(See p. 159.)

PATHANS—People of Afghan descent, inhabiting the North-Western frontier of the Punjab, Bhopal and other parts of India.—(See p. 173-174)

POVINDAHS.—A class of Afghans, who are at once agriculturists, traders and warriors.—(See p. 170-176.)

RAJPUTS. (Sons of kings).—The descendants of the ancient Hindu princes, and the dominant population of that portion of India on the north-west called Rajputana. They are a tall, proud, vigorous and athletic race, and sometimes make excellent soldiers. They are inordinately addicted to opium, and are fit for nothing until they take it, and after its effects have passed, are little better than idiots, until the dose be repeated. Indulgence in this baneful habit is more necessary to the Rajput than his food, and to eat opium together is the most inviolable pledge.

RAMUSIS.—A predatory tribe in the neighborhood of Poona and Satara, in the Bombay Presidency. They are fatalists and have no fear of law or punishment.

ROHILLAS.—A people of Afghan descent, addicted to agriculture as well as arms, occupying the tract called Rohilkhand, named after them. They are a tall and handsome race, of a comparatively fair complexion, animated and intelligent, but utterly devoid of truthfulness. Crimes are frequent amongst them, and perjury is almost universal. The Rohillas entered Hindustan early in the eighteenth century and conquered the district which bears their name. They were completely defeated by the British at the battle of Katra in 1774, an event which brought the Rohilla sway to an end.

SAURIAS, or SAURAS.—A wild but harmless and peaceful race inhabiting the southern part of Orissa, in the Bengal jurisdiction.

SHAIKHAWATIS.—A tribe of Rajputs inhabiting the northern district of the Jeypore state, which is named named after them—(See p. 103.)

SIKHS. (Disciples.)—A religious sect founded by one Nanak, the Guru or leader, in the fifteenth century, and occupying the Punjab, principally Sirhind. They were originally pure Theists but have since much degenerated, regarding their founder as worthy of divine honors. Their religion is chiefly confined to the Punjab, and is an heretical form of the Brahminical faith, its chief characteristic being the intolerance of its followers, a regard for animal life, chiefly in reference to the cow, which is held sacred, a belief in transmigration, and a total abstinence from tobacco; but Bhang, opium and spirituous liquors are freely used. They have no caste prejudices and are divided into several sects, the two principal of which are, the 'Khalsa' or old Sikhs, and the 'Singhs' or lions. The sacred book of the Sikhs, is called the GRANTH. At first they were quiet and unostentatious, but on the murder of one of their Gurus, they drew the sword, and one sect commenced to acquire temporal power, taking the name of 'Singhs, while the rest remained quiet under the name of 'Khalsa.' All are distinguished alike by their hatred of the Mahomedans. They are a tall, vigorous and athletic race, and make excellent soldiers.

SONTHALS.—A primitive people inhabiting the portion of the Bhagalpur division of Bengal, known as the Sonthal Pergunnahs, (See p. 52.) They are an uncouth race, but make excellent navvies. They number about 1,250,000.

SŪDAS.—A rude people, probably of Rajput lineage, chiefly shepherds, living in grass huts in the Thar or Great Desert of Rajputana, in a state of great privation and misery. Their principal source of income consists in the sale of their daughters to rich Mahomedans, and to the Jarijas of Cutch.

THAGS.—A confederacy of professsional murderers found chiefly in Central India, and devout worshippers of the goddess Kali. They have been very greatly reduced in numbers, and may now be regarded as almost extinct, owing to the severe measures of the British Government for their suppression.

TIYARS.—Cultivators on the Malabar coast, much despised by the other inhabitants.

TUDAS or TUNDAVERS.—A small, primitive and nomadic tribe, occupying some of the highest valleys of the Nilgiris. They are ignorant of the mythology, language, manners and customs of the Hindus, and are a tall, athletic race, of a bold appearance, but quiet and honest. Their wealth consists of large herds of buffaloes, which they tend and milk, exchanging the produce of their dairies for grain.

URIYAS.—(See Ooriyas.)

WAGHIAS.—A predatory tribe of Rajputs found in the Kattywar peninsula, Gujarat.

WARALIS.—A wild tribe speaking the Maratha language, and living in the forests of Northern Konkan, Bombay Presidency.

YANADIS.—A wild savage race inhabiting the country on the Coromandel Coast, in the vicinity of the Nellore district, Madras Presidency. In habits religion and language they are quite distinct from their neighbours; they are short in stature and of black complexion, capable of enduring great fatigue, and remarkably faithful and honest.
